hem-a-tim-e-ter, hæm-a-tim-e-ter (hem'a-tim'e-tēr or hē'ma-), n. [Gr. αἷμα (αἷμαρ-), blood, + μέτρον, measure.] A device for counting blood-corpuscles, consisting essentially of a microscope-slide having a cell which contains a known amount of blood.

hem-a-tin, hæm-a-tin (hem'a-tin or hē'ma-), n. [Gr. αἷμα (αἷμαρ-), blood.] A pigment containing iron, produced in the decomposition of hemoglobin.—hem-a-tin'ic, hæm-a-tin'ic, n. A medicine, as a compound of iron, which tends to increase the amount of hematin or hemoglobin in the blood.—hem'a-ti-nom'e-ter, hæm'a-ti-nom'e-ter fat, fāte, fār, fáll, ásk, fāre; net, mē, hùr; pin, pīne; not, nōte, mōve, nōr; up, lūte, pùll; oi, oil; ou, out; (lightened) aviāry, ēlect, agōny, intō, ūnite; (obscured) errānt, operā, ardēt, actōr, natūre; ch, chip; g, go; th, thin; τη, then; y, you;

- (-ti-nom'e-tër), n. [See -meter.] A device for determining the amount of hematin or hemoglobin in the blood.
- hem-a-tite, hæm-a-tite (hem'a-tit or hē'mā-), n. [L. hematites, hematite, < Gr. αιματιτης, blood-like, < αίμα, blood.] A native oxide of iron, Fe_2O_3 , having a reddish color when powdered: an important ore. — hem-a-tit'ic, hæm-a-tit'ic (-tit'ik), a.
- hemato-, hæmato-. Forms of Gr. αἷμα (ai-ma), blood, used in combination. Cf. hema- and hemo-. — hem-a-to-blast, hæm-a-to-blast (hem'a-tō-blast or hē'mā-), n. [+ -blast.] A protoplasmic mass, as in bone-marrow, from which a red blood-corpuscle is supposed to develop. — hem-a-to-cele, hæm'a-to-cele (-sël), n. [+ -cele.] In pathol., a tumor containing blood. — hem'a-to-crit, hæm'a-to-crit (-krit), n. [+ Gr. κριτής, decider, judge.] A centrifugal device for determining the volume of blood-corpuscles in a given quantity of blood. — hem-a-to-gen, hæm'a-to-gen (-jen), n. [+ -gen.] An iron-containing compound obtained from the yolk of hens' eggs, and supposed to be concerned in the production of hemoglobin; also, any of various preparations used in the treatment of anemia, etc. — hem'a-to-gen'e-sis, hæm'a-to-gen'e-sis (-jen'e-sis), n. The formation of blood. — hem-a-to-g'e-nous, hæm-a-to-g'e-nous (-toj'e-nus), a. [+ -genous.] Originating in the blood; also, blood-producing. — hem'a-toid, hæm'a-toid, a. [Gr. αιματοειδής: see -oid.] Resembling blood; blood-like. — hem-a-to'l'o-gy, hæm-a-to'l'o-gy (-tol'ō-jī), n. [+ -logy.] The branch of biology dealing with the blood. — hem-a-to'l'y-sis, hæm-a-to'l'y-sis (-i-sis), etc. Same as hemolysis, etc. — hem-a-to'ma, hæm-a-to'ma (-tō'mā), n.; pl. -mas or -mata (-mā-tā). [NL. hematoma: see -oma.] In pathol., a swelling or tumor filled with extravasated blood. — hem-a-tom'e-ter, hæm-a-tom'e-ter (-tom'e-tër), n. [+ -meter.] Any of various blood-testing devices, as for determining the percentage of hemoglobin, estimating the number of blood-corpuscles present, or measuring the blood-pressure. — hem'a-to-poi'e-sis, hæm'a-to-poi'e-sis (-poi-ē'sis), n. [NL. hematopoiesis, < Gr. αιματοποισις (poiēin, make).] The formation of blood. — hem'a-to-poi-et'ic, hæm'a-to-poi-et'ic (-et'ik), a.
- hem-a-to-sis, hæm-a-to-sis (hem'a-tō'sis or hē'mā-), n. [NL. hematosis, < Gr. αιμάτωσις, < αἷμα toûn, make into blood, < αἷμα, blood.] The formation of blood; also, the conversion of venous into arterial blood; arterIALIZATION.
- hem-a-tox-y-lin, hæm-a-tox-y-lin (hem'a-tok'si-lin or hē'mā-), n. [NL. Hæmatorylon, the logwood genus, < Gr. αἷμα (ai-ma), blood, + ξύλον, wood.] A crystalline compound obtained from logwood: used in microscopy for staining.
- hem-a-to-zo-on, hæm-a-to-zo-on (hem'a-tō-zō'on or hē'mā-), n.; pl. -zoa (-zō'ā). [NL. hematozoön, < Gr. αἷμα (ai-ma), blood, + ζῶον, animal.] An animal parasite living in the blood. — hem'a-to-zo'ic, hæm'a-to-zo'ic, a.
- hem-el-y-trum (hem-el'i-trum), etc. Same as hemielylum, etc.
- hem-e-ra-lo-pi-a (hem'e-rā-lō-pi-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ημεράλωφ, blind by day, < ἡμέρα, day, + ἀλαός, blind, + ὤψ, eye.] A condition of the eyes in which distinct vision is possible only at night or in dim light; day-blindness; also, nyctalopia, a visual condition exactly opposite; night-blindness.
- hemi-. [Gr. ἡμι-: see semi-.] A prefix meaning 'half.' Cf. semi-.
- hem-i-al-gia (hem-i-al'ji-ā), n. [NL.: see hemi- and -algia.] In pathol., pain or neuralgia involving only one side of the body or head.
- hem-i-a-nop-si-a (hem'i-ā-nop'si-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ἀν- priv. + ὄψις, sight.] In pathol., complete or partial loss of sight in one half of the field of vision, affecting one or both eyes.
- he-mic, hæ-mic (hē'mik), a. [Gr. αἷμα, blood.] Of or pertaining to the blood.
- hem-i-cra-ni-a (hem-i-krā'nī-ā), n. [LL., < Gr. ἡμικρανία, < ἡμι, half, + κρανίον, skull.] In pathol., a kind of severe headache, limited usually to one side of the head, and often accompanied with nausea; migraine; megrim.
- hem-i-cy-cle (hem'i-sī-kl), n. [L. hemicyclium, < Gr. ἡμικύκλιον, < ἡμι, half, + κύκλος, circle.] The half of a circle; a semicircle; a semicircular or approximately semicircular structure.
- hem-i-cy-lin-dri-cal (hem'i-si-lin'dri-kal), a. [See hemi-.] Having the form of half of a cylinder divided in the direction of its axis.
- hem-i-dem-i-sem-i-qua-ver (hem'i-dem'i-sem'i-kwā'vēr), n. [See hemi-.] In music, a note having half the time-value of a demisemiquaver; a sixty-fourth-note. See note under note, n.
- hem-i-el-y-trum, hem-i-el-y-tron (hem-i-el'i-trum, -tron), n.; pl. -tra (-trā). [See hemi- and elytrum.] One of the fore wings of hemipterous and especially heteropterous insects, coriaceous at the base and membranous at the tip. — hem-i-el'y-tral (-tral), a.
- hem-i-he-dral (hem-i-hē'dral), a. [Gr. ἡμι-, half, + ἔδρα, seat, base.] Of a crystal, having only half the planes or faces required by the maximum symmetry. — hem-i-he'drism, n. The property of being hemihedral. — hem-i-he'dron (-drōn), n. A hemihedral crystal or form.
- hem-i-mor-phic (hem-i-mōr'fik), a. [Gr. ἡμι-, half, + μορφή, form.] Of a crystal, having the two ends of an axis unlike in their planes or modifications. — hem-i-mor'phism, n. The property of being hemimorphic. — hem-i-mor'phite (-fit), n. Calamin (hydrous silicate of zinc): so called from its hemimorphic crystals.
- he-min, hæ-min (hē'min), n. [Gr. αἷμα, blood.] The hydrochloride of hematin, occurring in reddish-brown crystals, which in tests serve to indicate the presence of blood.
- hem-i-par-a-site (hem-i-par'ā-sit), n. [See hemi-.] A partially parasitic plant. — hem'i-par-a-sit'ic (-sit'ik), a.
- hem-i-ple-gi-a (hem-i-plē'ji-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + πληγία as in παραπληγία, E. paraplegia.] In pathol., paralysis affecting only one side of the body. — hem-i-pleg'ic (-plē'ik or -plē'jik), a.
- he-mip-ter (hē-mip'tēr), n. [NL. Hemiptera, pl., < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + πτερόν, wing.] Any of the Hemiptera, an order of insects (certain of which have the fore wings half or in part thickened or coriaceous) which includes the true bugs (bedbug, water-bugs, etc.), lice, and aphids. — he-mip'ter-an, a. and n. — he-mip'ter-ous, a. Having the fore wings half (or in part) thickened or coriaceous, as most of the true bugs; belonging to the Hemiptera (see hemip'ter).
- hem-i-sect (hem'i-sekt), v. t. [Gr. ἡμι-, half, + L. sectus, pp. of secare, cut: cf. bisect.] To cut into halves; bisect, esp. longitudinally, or into equal right and left parts: as, to hemisect an animal body. — hem-i-sec'tion (-sek'shən), n.
- hem-i-sphere (hem'i-sfēr), n. [L. hemisphaerium, < Gr. ἡμισφαίριον, < ἡμι, half, + σφαῖρα, E. sphere.] The half of a sphere; esp., half of the terrestrial globe or the celestial sphere, or a map or projection of either of these (as, the eastern and western hemispheres, the eastern and western halves of the terrestrial globe, the former including the continents of Europe, Asia, and Africa and their islands, and the latter the two American continents and their islands; the northern and southern hemispheres, the halves of the terrestrial globe north and south of the equator, or the corresponding divisions of the celestial sphere); in anat., either of the lateral halves of the cerebrum. — hem-i-spher'ic, hem-i-spher'i-cal (-sfer'ik, -i-kal), a. Of, pertaining to, or having the form of a hemisphere. — hem-i-spher'i-cal-ly, *adv. — hem-i-sphe'roid (-sfēr'oid), n. The half of a spheroid. — hem'i-sphe-roi'dal (-sfēr'oi'dal), *a.
- hem-i-stich (hem'i-stik), n. [L. hemistichium, < Gr. ἡμιστίχιον, < ἡμι, half, + στίχος, row, line.] In pros., the exact or approximate half of a stich, or poetic verse or line, esp. as divided by a cæsura or the like; also, an incomplete line, or a line of less than the usual length.
- hem-i-sys-to-le (hem-i-sis'tō-lē), n. [See hemi- and systole.] In physiol., a contraction of only one ventricle of the heart.
- hem-i-trope (hem'i-trōp), n. [F. hémitrope, < Gr. ἡμι-, half, + -τροπος, turned, < τρέπεν, turn.] I. a. Half-turned: specif. applied in mineralogy to a compound or twin crystal which has two similar parts or halves, one of which is turned half way round upon the other. II. n. A hemitrope crystal. — hem-i-trop'ic (-trop'ik), a.

(variable) d as d or j, s as s or sh, t as t or ch, z as z or zh; o, F. cloche; ü, F. menu; ch, Sc. loch; û, F. bonbon; ', primary accent; '', secondary accent; †, obsolete; <, from; +, and; =, equals. See also lists at beginning of book.

hem-lock (hem'lok), n. [AS. hemic, hymlice.] A poisonous apiaceous herb, Conium maculatum, with spotted stems, finely divided leaves, and small white flowers, used medicinally as a powerful sedative; a poisonous drink made from this herb (as, "A drowsy numbness pains My sense, as though of hemlock I had drunk": Keats's "Ode to a Nightingale"); also, any of various other apiaceous herbs, esp. species of the genus Cicuta ('water-hemlock'); also the hemlock-spruce, or its wood.—hem'lock=spruce', n. Any of the trees of the pinaceous genus Tsuga, esp. T. canadensis, a tree of eastern North America whose bark is used in tanning. See cut below.

Hemlock (Conium maculatum). — a, flower; b, fruit; c, carpel, cut transversely.

hem-mer (hem'ér), n. One who or that which hems; a sewing-machine attachment for hemming edges.

hemo-, hæmo-. Shorter forms of hemato-, hæmato- (Gr. αἷμα—contracted to αἷμο). Cf. hema-.—hem-o-gastric, hæm-o-gas-tric (hem-ō-gas'trik or hē-mō-), a. [See gastric.] Characterized by the effusion of blood into the stomach: as, hemogastric fever (yellow fever).—hem-o-glo'bin, hæm-o-glo'bin (-glō'bin), n. [+ L. globus, E. globe.] The coloring matter of the red blood-corpuscles, which serves to convey oxygen to the tissues: occurring in its simplest form (hemoglobin proper) in venous blood, and in combination with oxygen (oxyhemoglobin) in arterial blood.—hem'o-glo-bi-nu'ri-a, hæm'o-glo-bi-nu'ri-a, (-bi-nū'ri-ā), n. [NL.: see -uria.] In pathol., the presence of hemoglobin in the urine.—he-moid, hæ-moid (hē'moid), a. [Gr. αἰμοειδής: see -oid.] Blood-like; hematoid.

Branch with Cones of Hemlock-spruce (Tsuga canadensis).

he-mol, hæ-mol (hē'mol or -mōl), n. [Gr. αἷμα, blood.] An iron-containing product derived from hemoglobin: used as a hematinic.

he-mol-y-sin, hæ-mol-y-sin (hē-mol'i-sin), n. [See hemolysis.] A substance which causes the dissolution of the red corpuscles of the blood.

he-mol-y-sis, hæ-mol-y-sis (hē-mol'i-sis), n. [See hemo- and -lysis.] The process of dissolution of the blood-corpuscles.—hem-o-lyt-ic, hæm-o-lyt-ic (hem-ō-lit'ik or hē-mō-), a.

hem-o-phil-i-a, hæm-o-phil-i-a (hem-ō-fil'i-ā or hē-mō-), n. [NL. hæmophilia, < Gr. αἷμα, blood, + φιλία, affection, fondness.] In pathol., a morbid condition, usually congenital, characterized by a tendency to bleed immoderately, as from an insignificant wound: due to the blood not coagulating properly.—hem-o-phil'ic, hæm-o-phil'ic, a.

he-mop-ty-sis, hæm-op-ty-sis (hē-mop'ti-sis), n. [NL. hæmoptysis, < Gr. αἷμα, blood, + πτύσσις, spitting.] In pathol., the expectoration of blood or bloody mucus.

hem-or-rhage, hæm-or-rhage (hem'ō-rāj), n. [L. hæmorrhagia, < Gr. αἱμορραγία, < αἷμα, blood, + ῥήγνυναι, break, burst forth.] A discharge of blood, as from a ruptured blood-vessel; profuse bleeding.—hem-or-rhag'ic, hæm-or-rhag'ic (-raj'ik), a.

hem-or-rhoid, hæm-or-rhoid (hem'ō-rōid), n. [L. hæmorrhoida, < Gr. αἱμορροΐς (pl. -īdes), < αἷμα, blood, + ῥέω, flow.] A swelling formed by the dilatation of a blood-vessel at the anus: usually in pl.—hem-or-rhoi'dal, hæm-or-rhoi'dal (-roi'dal), a.

hem-o-spa-sia, hæm-o-spa-sia (hem-ō-spā'ziā or hē-mō-), n. [NL. hæmospasia, < Gr. αἷμα, blood, + σπᾶν, draw.] In med., the drawing or attracting of blood to a part, as by cupping.—hem-o-spas'tic, hæm-o-spas'tic (-spas'tik), a.

hem-o-sta-sia, hæm-o-sta-sia (hem-ō-stā'ziā or hē-mō-), n. [NL. hæmostasia, < Gr. αἷμα, blood, + στάσιναι, cause to stand.] In med., stagnation of blood in a part; also, any operation for arresting hemorrhage, as the ligation of an artery. Also he-mos-ta-sis, hæ-mos-ta-sis (hē-mos'ta-sis).—hem'o-stat, hæm'o-stat (-stat), n. [See -stat.] An instrument used to compress a bleeding vessel in order to arrest hemorrhage.—hem-o-stat'ic, hæm-o-stat'ic. I. a. Pertaining to stagnation of the blood; also, arresting hemorrhage, as a drug; styptic. II. n. A hemostatic agent or substance.

hem-o-tho-rax, hæm-o-tho-rax (hem-ō-thō'raks or hē-mō-), n. [See hemo-.] In pathol., the presence of blood in a pleural cavity.

hemp (hemp), n. [AS. henep, hænep, = D. henep = G. hanf = Icel. hampr, hemp; akin to Gr. κάνναβις, L. cannabis.] A tall, annual moraceous herb, Cannabis sativa, native in Asia, but cultivated in many parts of the world (see carl-hemp and finble); the tough fiber of this plant, used for making coarse fabrics, ropes, etc.; also, a narcotic drug obtained from the Indian hemp (see below); also, any of various plants resembling hemp, or any of various fibers similar to that of hemp (cf. manila, also Sisal hemp); also, a hangman's rope.—Indian hemp, an East Indian variety, Cannabis sativa indica (or Cannabis indica), of common hemp, having narcotic and poisonous properties and yielding hashish, bhang, cannabin, etc.; also, a North American apocynaceous herb, Apocynum cannabinum, yielding a strong fiber, which was used by American Indians for making nets (also called Canadian, or Canada hemp).—hemp'-ag'-ri-mo-ny, n. A European asteraceous herb, Eupatorium cannabinum, with dull purplish or reddish flowers; also, any of various related species.—hemp'en, a. Made of hemp; of or pertaining to hemp; resembling hemp.

hy-a-line (hi'a-lin). [LL. hyalinus, < Gr. ὑάλινος, < ὑαλος, glass.] I. a. Glassy; crystalline; transparent: as, hyaline cartilage (in anat., the typical translucent form of cartilage, containing little fibrous tissue). II. n. Something glassy or transparent; the clear sea (poetic: as, "the clear hyaline, the glassy sea," Milton's "Paradise Lost," vii. 619); in anat., the hyaloid membrane of the eye; also, hyaline cartilage.

hy-a-lite (hi'a-lit), n. [Gr. ὑαλος, glass.] A colorless variety of opal, sometimes transparent like glass, and sometimes whitish and translucent.

hy-a-loid (hi'a-loid). [Gr. ὑαλοειδής, < ὑαλος, glass, + εἶδος, form.] I. a. Glassy; hyaline: as, the hyaloid membrane of the eye (investing the vitreous humor). II. n. In anat., the hyaloid membrane of the eye.

hy-a-lo-plasm (hi'a-lō-plazm), n. [Gr. ὑαλος, glass, + πλάσμα, E. plasma, plasm.] In biol., the pellucid portion of the protoplasm of a cell, as distinguished from the granular and reticular portions.

Hy-blæ-an (hi-blæ'an), a. [L. Hyblæus.] Of or pertaining to the town of Hybla in ancient Sicily, celebrated for its honey; hence, honeyed; mellifuous.

hy-brid (hi'brid). [L. hybrida, hibrida.] I. n. The offspring of two animals or plants of different races, varieties, species, or genera (sometimes restricted to those produced by individuals of different species: cf. mongrel); a half-breed; a mongrel; hence, anything derived from heterogeneous sources, or composed of elements of different or incongruous kinds; specif., a word composed of elements belonging to different languages. II. a. Bred from two distinct races, varieties, species, or genera; hence, derived from heterogeneous sources, or of a mixed character (as, "The historians use a hybrid jargon intermixed with modern words": Hallam's "Literature of Europe," i. 1. § 87). — hy'brid-ism, n. Hybrid character; also, the production of hybrids. — hy'brid-ist, n. One who produces hybrids by crossing different species, etc. — hy-brid'i-ty, n. Hybrid character. — hy'brid-ize (-iz), v.; -ized, -izing. I. tr. To cause to produce hybrids; cross; also, to form in a hybrid manner, as words. II. intr. To cause the production of hybrids by crossing different species, etc.; also, to produce hybrids by crossing with a different species, etc. — hy'brid-iz-a'tion (-i-zä'shən), n. — hy'brid-iz-er (-i-zēr), n.

hy-da-tid (hi'dä-tid), n. [Gr. ὕδαρις (ὑδαριδ), watery vesicle, < ὕδωρ (ὑδαρ), water.] A cyst with watery contents, produced in man and animals by a tapeworm in the larval state; hence, the encysted larva of a tapeworm, esp. of Tænia echinococcus; a cysticercus.

hy-dra (hi'drä), n.; pl. -dras (-dräz), L. -dræ (-drē). [L. hydra, < Gr. ὕδρα, water serpent, < ὕδωρ, water: see water.] [cap. or l. c.] A monstrous serpent of Greek mythology, slain by Hercules, represented as having nine heads, each of which was replaced by two after being cut off unless the wound was cauterized; hence [l. c.], any persistent evil arising from many sources or difficult to extirpate; in zool., any of the fresh-water polyps constituting the genus Hydra, so called because when the tube-like body is cut into pieces each piece forms a new individual; [cap.] in astron., a southern constellation represented as a serpent.

hy-dra-cid (hi-dras'id), n. [See hydro-².] In chem., an acid which contains no oxygen, as hydrochloric acid, which is composed of hydrogen and chlorine.

hy-drae'mi-a, n. See hydremia.

hy-dra-gogue (hi'drä-gog). [LL. hydragogus, < Gr. ὕδραγωγός, < ὕδωρ, water, + ἀγωγός, leading, < ἄγω, lead.] In med.: I. a. Having the property of removing water or serum from the body, or of causing watery alvine evacuations. II. n. A hydragogue medicine.

hy-dra-head-ed (hi'drä-hed'ed), a. Having many heads, like the Hydra; also, self-renewing, like the Hydra; difficult to extirpate.

hy-dran-ge-a (hi-dran'jē-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ὕδωρ, water, + ἀγγεῖον, vessel: so called from the cup-shaped fruit.] Any shrub of the genus Hydrangea, various species of which are cultivated for their large, showy, white or pink or blue flower-clusters. — hy-dran-ge-a'ceous (-ä'shius), a. Belonging to the Hydrangeaceæ, or hydrangea family of shrubs and trees.

hy-drant (hi'drant), n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water.] An upright pipe with a spout, nozzle, or other outlet, usually in the street or elsewhere out of doors, for drawing water from a main.

hy-dranth (hi'dranth), n. [NL. Hydra, genus of polyps, + Gr. ἄνθος, flower.] In zool., one of the distinct elements, individuals, or zooids, which make up a compound hydrozoan.

hy-drar-gy-ri-a-sis (hi-drär-ji-rī'a-sis), n. [NL., < hydrargyrum: see hydrargyrum.] In pathol., a morbid condition due to the introduction of mercury into the system; mercurial poisoning.

hy-drar-gyr-ic (hi-drär-jir'ik), a. [See hydrargyrum.] Of or pertaining to mercury; mercurial. — hy-drar'gy-rism Combat between Hercules and the Hydra. — From a Greek amphora.

Hyacinth (Hyacinthus orientalis). — a, flower cut longitudinally; b, fruit cut transversely; c, seed cut longitudinally, showing the embryo.

Hydrangea (H. arborescens). — a, b, fertile and sterile flowers; c, fruit cut transversely; d, fruit entire.

- (-ji-rizm), n. Hydrargyriasis.—hy-drar'gy-rol (-rol or -röl), n. In phar., an organic salt of mercury, occurring in brownish-red scales: used as an antiseptic.
- hy-drar-gy-rum (hī-drār'ji-rum), n. [NL., < L. hydrargyrus, < Gr. ὑδράργυρος, < ὕδωρ, water, + ἄργυρος, silver.] Mercury; quicksilver: in chem., abbreviated Hg (without period).
- hy-dras-tine (hī-dras'tin), n. [NL. Hydrastis (see def.), < Gr. ὕδωρ, water, + δρᾶν, do (perhaps from the active properties of the juice).] In chem., a crystalline alkaloid found in the rootstock of the goldenseal, Hydrastis canadensis: used in medicine.—hy-dras'ti-nine (-ti-nin), n. In chem., a colorless crystalline compound formed by the oxidation of hydrastine: used in medicine.
- hy-drate (hī'drāt), n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water.] In chem., any of a class of compounds produced when certain substances, as metallic salts, unite with water, often represented in formulas as actually containing water (because when heated they usually break down into the original substance and water), but now commonly regarded as true molecular compounds (cf. water of hydration, and water of crystallization, under water, n.); less properly, a hydroxide.—hy'drate, v. t. or i.; -drated, -drating. To combine chemically with water; form into a hydrate.—hy-dra'tion (-dra'shon), n.—hy'dra'tor, n.
- hy-drau-lic (hī-drā'lik), a. [L. hydraulicus, < Gr. ὑδραυλός, < ὑδραυλός, hydraulic organ, < ὕδωρ, water, + αἰλός, flute, pipe.] Pertaining to water or other liquid in motion, or to hydraulics; also, operated by or employing water; also, hardening under water, as a cement.—hydrau-lic press, a press in which a pressure exerted by a small piston, as one worked by hand, is communicated through a confined liquid to a larger piston, the force being multiplied as many times as the area of the smaller piston must be multiplied to equal that of the larger.—hydraulic ram, a device by which the energy of descending water is utilized to raise a part of the water to a height greater than that of the source.—hy-drau'lic, v. t.; -licked, -licking. In mining, to work (gravely auriferous deposits, etc.) by means of a powerful jet of water, which breaks up the material and washes it down into a sluice.—hy-drau'li-cal-ly, adv.—hy-drau-li'cian (-lish'ān), n. One skilled in hydraulics.—hy-drau-li'ci-ty (-lis'i-ti), n. The quality or property, as of cement, of being hydraulic, or hardening under water.—hy-drau'lics, n. The science treating of water or other liquid in motion, its uses in engineering, the laws governing its action, etc.
- hy-dra-zine (hī'drā-zin or -zēn), n. [From hydrogen + azote.] In chem., a colorless, fuming liquid compound, H_4N_2 ; also, any of a class of compounds derived from it.
- hy-draz-o- (hī-draz'ō-), [See hydro-2 and azo-.] In chem., a combining form used to denote the presence of a group of hydrogen and nitrogen atoms, -HNNH-, united with two hydrocarbon radicals: as, hydrazobenzene (a crystalline compound, $C_6H_5HNNHC_6H_5$). Also hy-draz'o, a.
- hy-dra-zo-ic (hī-drā-zō'ik), a. [From hydrogen + azote.] In chem., noting or pertaining to an acid composed of hydrogen and nitrogen, HN_3 , occurring as a very explosive, colorless liquid with a penetrating odor.
- hy-dre-mi-a, hy-draē-mi-a (hī-drē'mi-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ὕδωρ, water, + αἷμα, blood.] In pathol., a state of the blood characterized by excess of the watery element.
- hy-dri-a (hī'dri-ā), n.; pl. hydræ (-ē). [L., < Gr. ὑδρία, water-pot, < ὕδωρ, water.] In Gr. antiq., a kind of vase for carrying water, with capacious body, narrow mouth, and one large handle at the back and a small one at each side.
- hy-dric (hī'drik), a. [From hydrogen.] Of or pertaining to hydrogen.
- hy-drics (hī'driks), n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water.] The branch of physics that treats of the properties of water.
- hy-dride, hy-drid (hī'drid or -drid, -drid), n. [From hydrogen.] In chem., a compound of hydrogen with another element or a radical.
- hy-dri-od-ic (hī-dri-od'ik), a. [See hydro-2.] In chem., containing hydrogen and iodine: as, hydriodic acid (a colorless gas, HI , with a suffocating odor).
- hydro-¹, hydr-¹. Forms of Gr. ὕδωρ, water, used in combination.
- hydro-², hydr-². Forms of hydrogen used in combination.
- hy-dro (hī'drō), n. Shortened form of hydropathic, n., also of hydro-aëroplane.
- hy-dro-a-ër-o-plane (hī-drō-ā'ē-rō-plān'), n. [See hydro-1.] An aëroplane provided with floats, or with a boat-like under part, enabling it to alight upon or ascend from water.
- hy-dro-air-plane (hī-drō-ār'plān), n. [See hydro-1.] A hydro-aëroplane.
- hy-dro-bi-plane (hī-drō-bī'plān), n. [See hydro-1.] A biplane equipped as a hydro-aëroplane for use on the water.
- hy-dro-bro-mic (hī-drō-brō'mik), a. [See hydro-2.] In chem., containing hydrogen and bromine: as, hydrobromic acid (a colorless gas, HBr , with a pungent odor).
- hy-dro-car-bon (hī-drō-kār'bōn), n. [See hydro-2.] In chem., any of a class of compounds containing only hydrogen and carbon.
- hy-dro-cele (hī'drō-sēl), n. [L., < Gr. ὑδροκήλη, < ὕδωρ, water, + κήλη, tumor.] In pathol., an accumulation of serous fluid; esp., dropsy of the testicle or scrotum.
- hy-dro-cel-lu-lose (hī-drō-sel'ū-lōs), n. [See hydro-1.] In chem., a brittle colloidal substance, $C_{12}H_{22}O_{11}$, obtained from cellulose by the action of dilute mineral acid.
- hy-dro-ceph-a-lus (hī-drō-sef'ā-lus), n. [NL., < Gr. ὑδροκέφαλον, < ὕδωρ, water, + κεφαλή, head.] In pathol., an accumulation of serous fluid within the cranium, esp. in infancy, often causing great enlargement of the head.—hy-dro-ceph'a-lous, a.
- hy-dro-chlo-ric (hī-drō-klō'rik), a. [See hydro-2.] In chem., containing hydrogen and chlorine: as, hydrochloric acid (a colorless gas, HCl , or an aqueous solution of it which is extensively used in chemical and industrial processes; muriatic acid).—hy-dro-chlo'ride (-rid or -rid), n. In chem., a compound or salt formed by the direct union of hydrochloric acid with a compound or radical.
- hy-dro-cy-an-ic (hī'drō-sī-an'ik), a. [See hydro-2.] In chem., containing hydrogen and cyanogen: as, hydrocyanic acid (a colorless liquid, HCN , with an odor like that of bitter almonds; prussic acid: a prompt and virulent poison).
- hy-dro-drome (hī'drō-drōm), n. [From hydro-1 + -drome (Gr. δρόμος, running) as in aërodrome (first sense).] A kind of motor-boat fitted with submerged planes which enable it to travel with great speed over the surface of the water after the manner of a hydroplane.
- hy-dro-dy-nam-ic (hī'drō-dī-nam'ik), a. [See hydro-1.] Pertaining to the force or motion of fluids, or to hydrodynamics.
- hy'dro-dy-nam'ics, n. The dynamics of fluids: commonly restricted to hydrokinetics, but in a wider sense including hydrokinetics, hydrostatics, and sometimes hydraulics.
- hy-dro-e-lec-tric (hī'drō-ē-lek'trik), a. [See hydro-1.] Pertaining to or effecting the generation of electricity by the friction of water or steam, or by water-power.
- hy-dro-flu-or-ic (hī'drō-flō-or'ik), a. [See hydro-2.] In chem., containing hydrogen and fluorine: as, hydrofluoric acid (a colorless, corrosive, volatile liquid, HF , used for etching glass).
- hy-dro-gen (hī'drō-jen), n. [F. hydrogène, < Gr. ὕδωρ, water, + γεν-, bear, produce (from its generating water by combining with oxygen).] Chem. sym., H ; at. wt., 1.008. A colorless, odorless, inflammable gas, which combines chemically with oxygen to form water: the lightest of the known elements.—hydrogen dioxide or peroxide, a colorless, unstable, oily liquid, H_2O_2 , the aqueous solution of which is used as a bleaching agent and an antiseptic.—hydrogen sulphide, a colorless, inflammable poisonous gas, H_2S , smelling like rotten eggs.—hy'dro-gen-ate (-āt), v. t.; -ated, -ating. To combine or treat with hydrogen.—hy'dro-gen-a'tion (-ā'shon), n.—hy'dro-gen-ize

Hydria. — Museum of Fine Arts, Boston.

fat, fāte, fār, fāl, āsk, fāre; net, mē, hēr; pin, pīne; not, nōte. mōve, nōr; up, lūte, pūll; oi, oil; ou, out; (lightened) aviāry, ēlect, agōny, intō, ūnite; (obscured) errant, operā, ardent, actor, natūre; ch, chip; g, go; th, thin; then, then; y, you;

(-iz), v. t.; -ized, -izing. To hydrogenate.—hy-drog'e-nous (-droj'e-nus), a. Pertaining to or containing hydrogen.

hy-dro-graph (hi/drō-grāf), n. [See hydro-¹ and -graph.] A hydrographic record, diagram, or chart.—hy-drog'ra-pher (-drog'ra-fēr), n. One versed in hydrography or engaged in hydrographic work.—hy-dro-graph'ic, hy-dro-graph'i-cal (-graf'ik, -i-kāl), a. Of or pertaining to hydrography.—hy-dro-graph'i-cal-ly, adv.—hy-drog'ra-phy, n. [See -graphy.] The science of the measurement and description of the sea, lakes, rivers, etc., with special reference to their use for the purposes of navigation and commerce.

hy-droid (hi/drōid), [See hydra and -oid.] In zool.: I. a. Noting, pertaining to, or resembling the hydras, or the hydrozoans; specif., noting or pertaining to that form of hydrozoan which is asexual and grows into branching colonies by budding (cf. Medusa). II. n. A hydroid hydrozoan; specif., the hydroid form of a hydrozoan.

hy-dro-ki-net-ic (hi/drō-ki-net'ik), a. [See hydro-¹.] Pertaining to the motion of fluids, or to hydrokinetics.—hy'dro-ki-net'ics, n. The kinetics of fluids: a branch of science usually confined to the theory of the motion of liquids.

hy-drol-o-gy (hi-drol'ō-jī), n. [See hydro-¹ and -logy.] The science dealing with water, its properties, laws, geographical distribution, etc.—hy-dro-log'ic, hy-dro-log'i-cal (-drō-loj'ik, -i-kāl), a.—hy-drol'o-gist, n.

hy-drol-y-sis (hi-drol'i-sis), n. [See hydro-¹ and -lysis.] A kind of chemical decomposition by which a compound is resolved into other compounds by taking up the elements of water.—hy'dro-lyte (-drō-lit), n. [See -lyte.] A compound subjected to hydrolysis.—hy-dro-lyt'ic (-lit'ik), a.—hy'dro-lyze (-liz), v. t.; -lyzed, -lyzing. To subject to hydrolysis.—hy'dro-lyz-a-ble, a.

hy-dro-man-cy (hi/drō-man-sī), n. [L. hydromantia, < Gr. ὑδωρ, water, + μαντεία, divination.] Divination by means of water.—hy-dro-man'tic, a.

hy-dro-me-chan-i-cal (hi/drō-mē-kan'i-kāl), a. [See hydro-¹.] Pertaining to mechanical devices in which water is employed, or to hydromechanics.—hy'dro-me-chan'ics, n. The mechanics of fluids: usually considered as embracing hydrokinetics (hydrodynamics), hydrostatics, and hydraulics.

hy-dro-me-du-sa (hi/drō-mē-dū'sā), n.; pl. -sæ (-sē). [NL.: see hydra and Medusa.] One of the Hydromedusæ, a variously limited group of coelenterates, comprising all or a portion of the hydrozoans.—hy'dro-me-du'san, a. and n.

hy-dro-mel (hi/drō-mel), n. [L., < Gr. ὑδρὸμελι, < ὑδωρ, water, + μέλι, honey.] A liquor consisting of honey and water: when fermented, known also as mead.

hy-dro-met-al-lur-gy (hi-drō-met'ā-lēr-jī), n. [See hydro-¹.] The assay or reduction of ores by means of liquid reagents.—hy'dro-met-al-lur'gi-cal, a.

hy-drom-e-ter (hi-drom'e-tēr), n. [See hydro-¹ and -meter.] An instrument for determining the specific gravity of liquids (also of solids) and hence the strength of solutions, usually consisting of a graduated tube made to float vertically in a liquid by means of a hollow bulb and of a counterpoise at the lower end; also, an instrument for measuring the velocity or discharge of water.—hy-dro-met'ric, hy-dro-met'ri-cal (-drō-met'rik, -ri-kāl), a.—hy-drom'e-try, n. [See -metry.] The art of using the hydrometer; the determination of specific gravity, density, purity, etc., by means of hydrometers.

hy-dro-mon-o-plane (hi-drō-mon'ō-plān), n. [See hydro-¹.] A monoplane equipped as a hydro-aëroplane for use on the water.

hy-dro-path (hi/drō-path), n. [From hydropathy.] A hydropathist.—hy-dro-path'ic. I. a. Of or pertaining to hydrophathy or water-cure. II. n. A hydro-pathic establishment; a sanatorium in which the treatment is chiefly by water-cure: as, "the Dunleith sphere of influence, where there were four doctors and a hydropathic" (Ian Maclaren's "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush," vii. 1).—hy-dro-path'i-cal, Hydrometer for Liquids, in Hydrometer-glass.

a.—hy-drop'a-thist (-drop'a-thist), n. One who practises or favors hydrophathy.

hy-drop-a-thy (hi-drop'a-thī), n. [See hydro-¹ and -pathy.] The treatment of disease by the external or internal use of water; hydrotherapy.

hy-drop-phane (hi/drō-fān), n. [Gr. ὑδωρ, water, + φαίνεσθαι, appear.] A partly translucent variety of opal, which becomes more translucent or transparent when immersed in water.—hy-drop'h'a-nous (-drof'a-nus), a.

hy-droph-i-lous (hi-drof'i-lus), a. [See hydro-¹ and -philous.] In bot., pollinated by the agency of water.

hy-drop-ho-bi-a (hi-drō-fō'bi-ā), n. [LL., < Gr. ὕδροφοβία, < ὑδροφόβος, fearing water, < ὑδωρ, water, + φέβεσθαι, flee in fear.] In pathol., a morbid dread of water, as in rabies; hence, the disease rabies, esp. in man.—hy-drop'h'o-b'ic, a.

hy-dro-phone (hi/drō-fōn), n. [See hydro-¹ and -phone.] An instrument employing the principles of the microphone, used to detect the flow of water through a pipe, as in locating waste; also, any of various devices for locating causes or sources of sound under water, as for determining the presence and position of submarines from the noise made by their engines, etc.; in med., an instrument used in auscultation, whereby sounds are conveyed through a column of water.

hy-dro-phyte (hi/drō-fit), n. [See hydro-¹ and -phyte.] A plant growing in water or very moist ground.—hy-dro-phyt'ic (-fit'ik), a.

hy-drop-ic (hi-drop'ik), a. Pertaining to hydrops; dropsical.

hy-drop-plane (hi/drō-plān), n. [See hydro-¹ and plane.] A kind of motor-boat provided with a plane or planes by means of which it can reduce its displacement at high speed or skim along the surface of the water; a plane on such a boat, or a similar attachment to an aëroplane enabling it to glide on the water; also, a horizontal rudder for submerging or elevating a submarine boat.

hy-dro-pneu-mat-ic (hi/drō-nū-mat'ik), a. [See hydro-¹.] Pertaining to, involving, or produced by the action or use of both water and air or water and gas: as, hydropneumatic apparatus or appliances.

hy-drops (hi'drops), n. [L., < Gr. ὑδρωψ, < ὑδωρ, water.] In pathol., dropsy. Also hy'drop-sy.

hy-dro-quin-one (hi-drō-kwin'ōn), n. [See hydro-² and quinone.] In chem., a white, sweetish crystalline compound, $C_6H_4(OH)_2$, formed by the reduction of quinone: used in photographic developers and in medicine.

hy-dro-scope (hi/drō-skōp), n. [See hydro-¹ and -scope.] An ancient device which measured the lapse of time by the subsidence of water in a graduated tube perforated at the bottom; also, an optical apparatus which enables the observer to view objects below the surface of the sea.—hy-dro-scop'ic (-skop'ik), a.

hy-dro-some (hi/drō-sōm), n. [NL. hydrosoma, < Hydra, genus of polyps, + Gr. σῶμα, body.] In zool., the entire body of a compound hydrozoan.

hy-dro-sphere (hi/drō-sfēr), n. [See hydro-¹.] The water on the surface of the globe; also, the aqueous vapor in the atmosphere.

hy-dro-stat (hi/drō-stat), n. [See hydro-¹ and -stat.] Any of various devices for preventing injury to a steam-boiler from low water; also, an electrical device for detecting the presence of water, as from overflow or leakage.

hy-dro-stat-ic (hi-drō-stat'ik), a. [See hydro-¹ and static.] Pertaining to fluids in equilibrium, their properties, pressure, etc., or to hydrostatics.—hydrostatic press, a hydraulic press.—hy-dro-stat'i-cal-ly, adv.—hy-dro-stat'ics, n. The statics of fluids: a branch of science usually confined to the theory of the equilibrium and pressure of liquids.

hy-dro-sul-phide (hi-drō-sul'fid or -fid), n. [See hydro-².] In chem., a compound formed when one of the hydrogen atoms of hydrogen sulphide (H_2S) has been replaced by a more strongly electropositive element or radical: as, sodium hydrosulphide ($NaHS$).—hy-dro-sul-phite (-fit), n. In chem., a salt of hydrosulphurous acid.—hy-dro-sul-phu-ric (-fū'rik), a. In chem., containing hydrogen and sulphur: as, hydrosulphuric acid (hydrogen sulphide).—hy-dro-sul-phu-rous, a. In chem., containing hydrogen and sulphur: as, hydrosulphurous acid (hyposulphurous acid, $H_2S_2O_4$).

hy-dro-tech-ny (hī-drō-tek-nī), n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, + τέχνη, art.] Hydraulic engineering, esp. when applied to the storage and distribution of water; the technics of water-supply.—hy-dro-tech-nic, hy-dro-tech-ni-cal, a.

hy-dro-ther-a-peu-tics (hī-drō-ther-a-pū'tiks), n. [See hydro-¹.] That branch of therapeutics which deals with the curative use of water.—hy-dro-ther-a-peu'tic, a.—hy-dro-ther'a-py, n. Treatment of disease by means of water.—hy-dro-the-rap'ic (-the-rap'ik), a.

hy-dro-ther-mal (hī-drō-thēr-māl), a. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, + θερμός, hot.] Of or pertaining to heated water: applied esp. to the action of heated waters in producing geological changes by dissolving and redepositing mineral substances.

hy-dro-tho-rax (hī-drō-thō'raks), n. [NL., < Gr. ὕδωρ, water, + θώραξ, chest.] In pathol., the presence of serous fluid in one or both pleural cavities.—hy-dro-tho-ra'cic (-thō-ras'ik), a.

hy-dro-trop-ic (hī-drō-trop'ik), a. [See hydro-¹ and -tropic.] In bot., turning or tending toward moisture, as growing organs; taking a particular direction with reference to moisture.—hy-drot'ro-pism (-drot'rō-pizm), n. In bot., hydro-tropic tendency or growth.

hy-drous (hī'drus), a. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water.] Containing water; in chem. and mineral., containing water or its elements in some kind of union, as in hydrates or in hydroxides.

hy-drox-ide (hī-drok'sid or -sid), n. [See hydro-¹.] In chem., a compound consisting of an element or radical (esp. a metal or basic radical) combined with one or more hydroxyl groups.

hy-drox-y- (hī-drok'si-), [From hydr(o)gen + oxy(gen).] In chem., a combining form indicating the presence of the hydroxyl group: as, hydroxybenzene (a compound formed from benzene by substituting one or more hydroxyl groups for its hydrogen atoms). Also hy-drox'y, a.

hy-drox-yl (hī-drok'sil), n. [From hydr(o)gen + ox(y)gen + -yl.] In chem., a univalent radical or group, OH, containing hydrogen and oxygen.—hy-drox'yl-am'ine (-am'-in), n. In chem., a crystalline basic compound, NH_2OH , resembling ammonia in chemical properties, and used as a reducing agent.

hy-dro-zo-ön (hī-drō-zō'on), n.; pl. -zoa (-zō'ä). [NL., < Hydra, genus of polyps, + Gr. ζῶον, animal.] Any of the Hydrozoa, a class of coelenterate aquatic (mostly marine) animals, simple or compound, including the hydras and other polyps, many jellyfishes, etc.—hy-dro-zo'an, a. and n.

hy-e-na (hī-ē'nä), n. [L. hyæna, < Gr. ὕαινα, < ὕς, hog.] Any of the nocturnal carnivorous quadrupeds constituting the genus Hyæna, as H. striata ('striped hyena' or 'laughing hyena'), a ravenous but cowardly African and Asiatic species about the size of a large dog, living chiefly on carrion, or H. brunnea ('brown hyena'), of South Africa, or H. crocuta ('spotted hyena'), of southern parts of Africa.—painted hyena, the hunting-dog, Lycæon pictus.—hy-e'na-dog, n. The hunting-dog, Lycæon pictus.

hyeto- Form of Gr. ἕτος, rain, used in combination.—hy-e-to-graph (hī'e-tō-gráf), n. [+ -graph.] A chart showing the rainfall.—hy-e-tog'ra-phy (-tog'rā-fī), n. [+ -graphy.] The branch of meteorology dealing with the distribution of rain.—hy'e-to-graph'ic, hy'e-to-graph'i-cal (-gráf'ik, -i-kāl), a.—hy-e-tol'o-gy (-tol'ō-jī), n. [+ -logy.] The branch of meteorology dealing with rain, snow, etc.—hy'e-to-log'i-cal (-loj'i-kāl), a.

Hy-ge-ia (hī-jē'ä), n. [Gr. Ὑγία, personification of ὕγεια, ὕγεια, health, < ὕγις, sound, healthy.] In class. myth., the goddess of health, daughter of Æsculapius.—Hy-ge'ian, a. Pertaining to the goddess Hygeia; [l. c.] pertaining to health or to hygiene; hygienic.—hy'ge-ist (-jē-ist), n. A hygienist.

hy-gi-ene (hī'ji-ën), n. [F. hygiène, < Gr. ὑγιεινός, healthful, sanitary, < ὕγις, sound, healthy.] The science which deals with the preservation of health; sanitary science.—hy-gi-en'ic (-en'ik), a. Pertaining to hygiene; sanitary.—hy-gi-en'i-cal-ly, adv.—hy-gi-en'ics, n. Hygiene.—hy'gi-en-ist (-ē-nist), n. One versed in hygiene.

hygro- Form of Gr. ὑγρός, wet, moist, used in combination.—hy-gro-graph (hī'grō-gráf), n. [+ -graph.] An instrument which registers automatically the variations in atmospheric humidity.—hy-grol'o-gy (-grol'ō-jī), n. [+ -logy.] The science which treats of humidity, as that of the atmosphere.—hy-grom'e-ter (-grom'e-tēr), n. [+ -meter.] An instrument for determining the humidity of the atmosphere.—hy-gro-met'ric (-met'rik), a. Pertaining to the hygrometer or hygrometry; also, hygroscopic.—hy-grom'e-try, n. [+ -metry.] The branch of physics that treats of the determination of the humidity of air and gases.—hy-groph'i-lous (-grof'i-lus), a. [+ -philous.] In bot., growing in water or moist places.—hy'gro-scope (-skōp), n. [+ -scope.] An instrument which shows the variations in the humidity of the air.—hy-gro-scop'ic (-skop'ik), a. Pertaining to or perceptible by the hygroscope; also, absorbing or attracting moisture from the air; in bot., sensitive to or caused by moisture.

hy-ing (hī'ing), Present participle of hie.

hy-lic (hī'lik), a. [Gr. ὑλικός, < ὕλη, wood, matter.] Of or pertaining to matter; material.—hy'li-cism (-li-sizm), hy'li-sm, n. Materialism.—hy'li-cist (-sist), n. A materialist.

hylo- Form of Gr. ὕλη, wood, matter, used in combination.—hy-loph-a-gous (hī-lof'ā-gus), a. [Gr. ὑλοφάγος: see -phagous.] Eating wood, as certain beetles.—hy-lo-the-ism (hī'lō-thē-izm), n. [+ Gr. θεός, god.] The doctrine that matter or the material universe is God.—hy-lo-zo'ic (-zō'ik), a. Pertaining to or characterized by hylozoism.—hy-lo-zo'ism, n. [+ Gr. ζῶή, life.] The doctrine that all matter is endowed with life.—hy-lo-zo'ist, n. A believer in hylozoism.—hy'lo-zo-is'tic (-zō-is'tik), a. Of or pertaining to hylozoists or hylozoism.—hy'lo-zo-is'ti-cal-ly, adv.

hy-men¹ (hī'men), n. [Gr. ὑμήν, thin skin, membrane.] In anat., a fold of mucous membrane extending across and partly closing the external orifice of the vagina.

Hy-men² (hī'men), n. [L., < Gr. ὕμην.] The Greek god of marriage, represented as a young man bearing a bridal torch; hence [cap. or l. c.], marriage or a marriage-song (now rare).—hy-me-ne-al (hī-mē-nē'al), a. Pertaining to marriage. II. n. A marriage-song; also, pl., nuptials.—hy-me-ne'an, a.

hy-me-nop-ter (hī-mē-nop'tēr), n. [NL. Hymenoptera, pl., < Gr. ὑμενόπτερος, having membranous wings, < ὑμήν, membrane, + πτερόν, wing.] Any of the Hymenoptera, an order of insects having (when winged) four membranous wings, and including the wasps, bees, ants, etc.—hy-me-nop'ter-an (-tēr-an), a. and n.—hy-me-nop'ter-ous, a. Having membranous wings; belonging to the hymenopters.

hymn (him), n. [LL. hymnus, < Gr. ὕμνος, festive song, ode, hymn.] A song or ode in praise or honor of God, a deity, a nation, etc.; esp., a metrical composition designed to be sung in religious worship.—hymn, v.; hymned, hymning (him'ing or him'ning). I. tr. To praise or celebrate in a hymn (as, "As sons of one great Sire, Hymning the Eternal Father": Milton's "Paradise Lost," vi. 96); also, to sing or express in a hymn. II. intr. To sing hymns.—hym-nal (him'nāl), a. Of or pertaining to hymns. II. n. A book of hymns for use in divine worship.—hym-na-ry (-nā-ri), n.; pl. -ries (-riz). [ML. hymnarium.] A hymnal.—hymn'=book, n. A hymnal.—hym'nic, a. Of or fat, fāte, fār, fāl, āsk, fāre; net, mē, hēr; pin, pīne; not, nōte, möve, nōr; up, lūte, pūll; oi, oil; ou, out; (lightened) aviāry, ēlect, agōny, intō, quīte; (obscured) errant, operā, ardent, actōr, natūre; ch, chip; g, go; th, thin; th, then; y, you;

pertaining to hymns; having the character of a hymn.—hym'nist, n. A composer of hymns.

hym-no-dy (him-nō-dī), n. [ML. hymnodia, < Gr. ὕμνος, hymn, + δειδναι, sing.] The singing or the composition of hymns or sacred songs; also, hymns collectively.—hym'no-dist, n.

hym-nog-ra-phy (him-nog'ra-fi), n. [Gr. ὕμνος, hymn; see -graphy.] The writing of hymns.—hym-nog'ra-pher, n.

hym-nol-o-gy (him-nol'ō-jī), n. [Gr. ὕμνος, hymn; see -logy.] The study of hymns, their history, classification, etc.; also, the composition of hymns; also, hymns collectively.—hym-no-log'ic, hym-no-log'i-cal (-nō-loj'ik, -i-kal), a.—hym-nol'og-ist, n.

hy-oid (hi'oid). [NL. hyoides, < Gr. ὑοειδής, < ὑ, the letter upsilon, + εἶδος, form.] I. a. Shaped like the Greek letter υ (upsilon); in anat., noting or pertaining to a bone of this shape at the root of the tongue in man, or a corresponding bone or collection of bones in animals. II. n. In anat., the hyoid bone.

hy-os-cine (hi'ō-sin), n. [L. hyoscyamus; see hyoscyamine.] In chem., an alkaloid occurring with hyoscyamine in henbane, etc., and chemically identical with scopolamine: used as a mydriatic, etc.

hy-os-cy-a-mine (hi'ō-sī'ā-min), n. [L. hyoscyamus, < Gr. ὕοσκιάμος, henbane, lit. 'hog's bean,' < ὕς, hog, + κύαμος, bean.] In chem., a poisonous alkaloid obtained from henbane and other solanaceous plants, used as a sedative, mydriatic, etc.

hyp (hip), n. and v. See *hyp*⁴.

hyp-æs-the-sia (hip-es-thē'ziā), n. [NL.: see hypo- and æsthesia.] In pathol., diminished capacity for sensation.—hyp-æs-the'sic (-zik), a.

hyp-æ'thral, a. See hypethral.

hyp-pal-lage (hi-pal'ā-jē or hi-), n. [LL., < Gr. ὑπαλλαγή, < ὑπαλλάσσειν, exchange, < ὑπό, under, + ἀλλάσσειν, change.] In rhet., a figure which consists in an inversion of syntactical relation between two words, as in 'to give the winds to the fleets' (L. dare classibus austros: Virgil's "Æneid," iii. 61), instead of 'to give the fleets to the winds.'

hyp-pax-i-al (hi-pak'ī-āl), a. [See hypo- and *axis*¹.] In anat., beneath or anterior to an axis, esp. the vertebral axis.

hyper- [Gr. ὑπερ-, repr. ὑπέρ, prep., over, above, beyond, as adv. overmuch, beyond measure; akin to L. super and E. over: see super- and over.] A prefix of Greek origin, meaning 'over,' 'above,' 'beyond,' and hence 'exceedingly,' 'to excess,' freely used as an English formative, as in hyperacute, hypermaturation, hypernormal, hypersecretion. In chemical terms hyper- (like super-), as indicating the highest of a series of compounds or the largest amount of an element, is now commonly replaced by per-. Cf. hypo-.

hyper-a-cid (hi-pēr-as'id), a. Excessively acid.—hy'per-a-cid'i-ty (-a-sid'i-ti), n. Excessive acidity, as of the gastric juice. Cf. hyopacid.

hyper-æ-mi-a, etc. See hyperemia, etc.

hyper-æs-the-sia (hi'pēr-es-thē'ziā), n. [NL.: see hyper- and æsthesia.] In pathol., increased or excessive capacity for sensation.—hy'per-æs-the'tic (-thet'ik), a.

hyper-al-ge-sia (hi'pēr-al-jē'ziā), n. [NL., < Gr. ὑπέρ, over, + ἀλγεῖν, feel pain.] In pathol., an abnormally great sensitiveness to pain.—hy'per-al-ge'sic (-zik), a.

hyper-ba-ton (hi-pēr-bā-ton), n.; pl. -la (-tā). [L., < Gr. ὑπέρβατον, < ὑπερβαίνειν, pass over, < ὑπέρ, over, + βαίνειν, go.] In rhet., inversion of the natural or logical order of words, as for emphasis, as in "Great is Diana of the Ephesians" (Acts, xix. 28).

hyper-bo-la (hi-pēr'bō-lā), n.; pl. -las (-lāz). [NL., < Gr. ὑπερβολή, hyperbola, lit. 'a throwing beyond': see hyperbole.] In geom., a curve consisting of two distinct and similar branches, formed by the intersection of a plane with two similar cones placed apex to apex.

hyper-bo-le (hi-pēr'bō-lē), n. [L., < Gr. ὑπερβολή, a throwing beyond, excess, hyperbole, also a hyperbola, < ὑπερβάλλειν, throw beyond, exceed, < ὑπέρ, over, beyond, + βάλλειν, throw.] In rhet., obvious exaggeration, as for effect; an extravagant statement not intended to be understood literally.—hy-per-bol'ic (-bol'ik), a. [Gr. ὑπερβολικός.] Pertaining to or of the nature of hyperbole; exaggerated; using hyperbole, or exaggerating; also, of or pertaining to the hyperbola. Also hy-per-bol'i-cal.—hy-per-bol'i-cal-ly, adv.—hy-per'bo-lism, n. The use of hyperbole.—hy-per'bo-list, n. One who uses hyperbole.—hy-per'bo-lize, v.; -lized, -lizing. I. intr. To use hyperbole; exaggerate. II. tr. To represent or express with hyperbole or exaggeration.

Hy-per-bo-re-an (hi-pēr-bō'rē-an). [LL. Hyperboreanus, < L. Hyperborei, < Gr. Ὑπερβόρειοι, pl., the Hyperboreans, < ὑπέρ, beyond, + βορέας, the north wind, Boreas.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Hyperboreans; hence [l. c.], of the far north; arctic; frigid. II. n. One of a people described in Greek legend as living in a land of perpetual sunshine and plenty beyond the north wind; hence [l. c.], an inhabitant of the far north.

hy-per-cat-a-lec-tic (hi'pēr-kat-ā-lek'tik), a. [LL. hypercatalecticus, < Gr. ὑπερκατάληκτος, < ὑπέρ, beyond, + καταλήγειν, leave off: see catalectic.] In pros., having an additional syllable after the last complete dipody.

hy-per-crit-ic (hi-pēr-krit'ik), n. [See hyper-.] One who is excessively or captiously critical.—hy-per-crit'i-cal, a. Excessively or captiously critical; overcritical.—hy-per-crit'i-cal-ly, adv.—hy-per-crit'i-cism (-sizm), n. Excessively minute or severe criticism.

hy-per-du-li-a (hi'pēr-dū-lī'ā), n. [ML., < Gr. ὑπέρ, beyond, + δουλία, E. dulia.] In Rom. Cath. theol., the veneration offered to the Virgin Mary as the most exalted of mere creatures. Cf. dulia and latria.

hyper-e-mi-a, hyper-æ-mi-a (hi-pēr-ē'mi-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ὑπέρ, over, + αἷμα, blood.] In pathol., an excessive accumulation of blood in any part.—hy-per-ē'mic, hyper-æ'mic (-ē'mik or -em'ik), a.

hy-per-es-the-sia, etc. See hyperæsthesia, etc.

hy-per-eu-tec-tic (hi'pēr-ū-tek'tik), a. [See hyper- and eutectic.] Noting or pertaining to steel whose combined carbon content is over 4.3%, which is the amount contained in the eutectic alloy of carbon and iron.

hyper-hi-dro-sis, hyper-i-dro-sis (hi'pēr-hi-drō'sis, -i-drō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ὑπέρ, over, + ἰδρωσις, E. hidrosis.] In pathol., excessive sweating.

hy-pe-ri-ca-ceous (hi'pē-ri-kā'shius), a. [L. hypericum, < Gr. ὑπέρεικον, St. John's-wort, < ὑπό, under, + ερείκειν, heath.] Belonging to the Hypericaceæ, or St. John's-wort family of plants.

hyper-ki-ne-sia (hi'pēr-ki-nē'ziā), n. [NL., < Gr. ὑπέρ, over, + κινεῖν, move.] In pathol., abnormal amount of muscular action; spasm. Also hy'per-ki-ne'sis (-sis).—hy'per-ki-net'ic (-net'ik), a.

hyper-me-ter (hi'pēr-me-tēr), n. [LL., < Gr. ὑπέρμετρος, beyond measure, beyond the meter, < ὑπέρ, beyond, + μέτρον, measure.] In pros., a verse or line having one or more syllables in addition to those proper to the meter.—hy-per-met'ric, hy-per-met'ri-cal (-met'rik, -ri-kal), a.

hyper-met-rop (hi-pēr-met'rōp), n. [Gr. ὑπέρμετρος, beyond measure, + ὤψ, eye.] A person affected with hypermetropia.—hy'per-me-tro'pi-a (-me-tro'pi-ā), n. [NL.] In pathol., a condition of the eye in which parallel rays are focused behind the retina, distant objects being seen more distinctly than near ones; far-sightedness: opposed to myopia.—hy'per-me-trop'ic (-trop'ik), a. Pertaining to or affected with hypermetropia; far-sighted.

hy-perm-ne-sia (hi-pēm-nē'ziā), n. [NL., < Gr. ὑπέρ, over, + μνᾶσθαι, remember.] Unusual power of recollection. Also hy-perm-ne'sis (-sis).

hy-per-o-pi-a (hi-pēr-ō'pi-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ὑπέρ, over, + ὤψ, eye.] Hypermetropia.—hy-per-op'ic (-op'ik), a.

hy-per-os-mi-a (hi-pēr-os'mi-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ὑπέρ, over, + ὀσμή, smell.] An abnormally acute sense of smell.—hy-per-os'mic, a.

hy-per-os-to-sis (hi'pēr-os-tō'sis), n.; pl. -toses (-tō'sēz). [NL., < Gr. ὑπέρ, over, beyond, + ὀστέον, bone.] A (variable) đ as d or j, š as s or sh, ť as t or ch, ž as z or zh; o, F. cloche; ü, F. menu; čh, Sc. loch; ñ, F. bonbon; ', primary accent; ˆ, secondary accent; †, obsolete; <, from; +, and; =, equals. See also lists at beginning of book.

- morbid outgrowth of bone from a bone; also, a normal increase or outgrowth of bony tissue.
- hy-per-ox-ide (hī-pēr-ok'sid or -sid), n. [See hyper-.] Same as peroxide.
- hy-per-phe-nom-e-nal (hī-pēr-fē-nom'e-nal), a. [See hyper-.] Superior to the phenomenal; transcendental; noumenal.
- hy-per-phys-i-cal (hī-pēr-fiz'i-kal), a. [See hyper-.] Above or beyond the physical; immaterial; supernatural.
- hy-per-pla-sia (hī-pēr-plā'ziā), n. [NL., < Gr. ὑπέρ, over, + πλάσσειν, form.] In pathol. and bot., abnormal multiplication of cells or structural elements.—hy-per-pla'sic (-zik), hy-per-plas'tic, a.
- hy-perp-ne-a (hī-pēr-pnē'ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ὑπέρ, over, + πνέειν, blow, breathe.] In pathol., energetic or labored respiration.
- hy-per-py-rex-i-a (hī-pēr-pī-rek'si-ā), n. [NL.: see hyper- and pyrexia.] In pathol., an abnormally high degree of fever.—hy-per-py-rex'i-al, a.
- hy-per-sen-si-tive (hī-pēr-sen'si-tiv), a. [See hyper-.] Excessively sensitive.—hy-per-sen'si-tive-ness, n.
- hy-per-space (hī-pēr-spās), n. [See hyper-.] Space of more than three dimensions.
- hy-per-sthene (hī-pēr-sthēn), n. [Gr. ὑπέρ, over, + σθένος, strength (with reference to difficult frangibility).] A native silicate of iron and magnesium, usually of a grayish or greenish-black color.—hy-per-sthen'ic (-sthen'ik), a.
- hy-per-sus-cep-ti-bil-i-ty (hī-pēr-su-sep-ti-bil'i-ti), n. [See hyper-.] Increased or abnormal susceptibility; in pathol., anaphylaxis.
- hy-per-tro-phy (hī-pēr-trō'fī), n. [NL. hypertrophía, < Gr. ὑπέρ, over, + τρέφειν, nourish.] In pathol. and bot., enlargement of a part or organ, as through excessive nutrition; excessive growth. Also fig.—hy-per-troph'ic (-trof'ik), a.—hy-per'tro-phy, v. t. or i.; -phied, -phying. To affect with or undergo hypertrophy.
- hyp-es-the-sia, etc. See hypæsthesia, etc.
- hy-pe-thral, hy-pæ-thral (hī-pē'thral or hī-), a. [L. hypæthrus, < Gr. ὑπαῖθος, < ὑπό, under, + αἶθήρ, sky, E. ether.] Open to the sky, or having no roof, as a building; also, in the open air.
- hy-pha (hī'fā), n.; pl. hyphæ (-fē). [NL., < Gr. ὕφή, web.] In bot., one of the thread-like elements of the thallus in fungi, consisting of a membrane inclosing protoplasm, and developing by apical growth.—hy'phal, a.
- hy-phen (hī'fen), n. [LL. hyphen, < Gr. ὕφεν, a sign for joining syllables, < ὕφεν, adv., for phrase ὅφ' ἐν, under one, in one, together.] A short line (-) used to connect the parts of a compound word, or the parts of a word divided for any purpose, as for syllabication or etymological analysis; specif., recently, in the U. S., this mark as used in designations (as German-American, etc.) of American citizens of foreign birth or descent (often with opprobrious force as implying incomplete allegiance to their adopted country and undue loyalty to that of their origin).—hy'phen, v. t. To hyphenate.—hy'phen-ate (-āt), v. t.; -ated, -ating. To join by a hyphen; write with a hyphen.—hy'phen-ate. I. a. Joined by or written with a hyphen; specif., in the U. S., noting American citizens of foreign birth or descent as designated by a hyphenated term (as German-American, etc.), esp. those of this class whose complete allegiance to their adopted country is questionable; pertaining to such citizens. II. n. In the U. S., a hyphenate citizen.—hy'phen-at-ed (-ā-ted), p. a. Joined by or written with a hyphen; specif., in the U. S., hyphenate.—hy-phen-a'tion (-ā'shən), n. The act of joining by or writing with a hyphen; also, in the U. S., the practices or principles of hyphenates.—hy'phen-ism, n. In the U. S., the spirit or practices of hyphenates.—hy'phen-ize (-iz), v. t.; -ized, -izing. To hyphenate.—hy'phen-i-za'tion (-i-zā'shən), n.
- hyp-na-gogue (hip'nā-gog), n. [Gr. ὑπνος, sleep, + ἀγωγός, leading, < ἄγω, lead.] Something that induces sleep; a hypnotic.—hyp-na-gog'ic (-gōj'ik), a.
- hyp-nic (hip'nik), a. [Gr. ὑπνικός, < ὑπνος, sleep.] Of, pertaining to, or inducing sleep; hypnotic.
- hypno-. Form of Gr. ὑπνος, sleep, used in combination: sometimes used to mean the hypnotic sleep, or hypnosis.—hyp-no-gen-e-sis (hip-nō-jen'e-sis), n. Induction of the hypnotic state.—hyp'no-ge-net'ic (-jē-net'ik), a.—hyp-
- nog'e-ny (-noj'e-ni), n. [+ -geny.] Hypnogenesis.—hyp-no-gen'ic, hyp-nog'e-nous, a.—hyp'noid, a. [See -oid.] Resembling hypnosis.—hyp-nol'o-gy (-nol'ō-jī), n. [+ -logy.] The science dealing with the phenomena of sleep.—hyp-no-log'ic, hyp-no-log'i-cal (-loj'ik, -i-kal), a.—hyp-nol'o-gist, n.—hyp-no-pho'bi-a (-fō'bī-ā), n. [NL.: see -phobia.] In pathol., a morbid dread of falling asleep.
- hyp-no-sis (hip-nō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ὑπνοῦν, put to sleep, < ὑπνος, sleep; see sopor.] A condition or state, allied to normal sleep, which can be artificially induced and is characterized by marked susceptibility to suggestion, loss of will-power, more or less loss of sensation, etc.; the hypnotic state; also, hypnotism.
- hyp-nos-o-phy (hip-nos'ō-fī), n. [Gr. ὑπνος, sleep, + σοφία, wisdom.] Knowledge or the science of the phenomena of sleep.—hyp-nos'o-phist, n.
- hyp-no-ther-a-py (hip-nō-ther'a-pī), n. [See hypno- and therapy.] Treatment of disease by means of hypnotism.
- hyp-not'ic (hip-not'ik). [LL. hypnoticus, < Gr. ὑπνωτικός, < ὑπνοῦν, put to sleep; see hypnosis.] I. a. Inducing sleep; also, pertaining to hypnosis or hypnotism; also, susceptible to hypnotism, as a person. II. n. An agent or drug that produces sleep; a sedative; also, a person under the influence of hypnotism; one subject to hypnotic influence.—hyp-not'i-cal-ly, adv.—hyp-no-tism (-nō-tizm), n. The induction of hypnosis; also, the science dealing with the induction of hypnosis; loosely, hypnosis.—hyp'no-tist, n. One who hypnotizes.—hyp'no-tiz-a-ble (-tī-zā-bl), a. Capable of being hypnotized.—hyp'no-tize (-tiz), v. t.; -tized, -tizing. To put in the hypnotic state.—hyp'no-ti-za'tion (-tī-zā'shən), n.—hyp'no-tiz-er (-tī-zēr), n.
- hypo-, hyp-. [Gr. ὑπο-, ὑπ-, repr. ὑπό, prep. and adv., under; akin to L. sub, under; see sub-.] A prefix of Greek origin, meaning 'under,' 'in a lower position,' 'in a lesser degree,' 'slightly,' 'somewhat,' freely used as an English formative, esp. in scientific words, as in hypæsthesia, hypoc-acidity, hyposecretion, hypotoxicity. In chemical terms hypo- indicates a lower place in a series of compounds or a lesser amount of an element. Cf. hypo-.
- hy-po (hī'pō), n. Shortened form of hypochondria, also of sodium hyposulphite (see hyposulphite).
- hy-po-a-cid-i-ty (hī'pō-a-sid'i-ti), n. [See hypo-.] Acidity in a lesser degree than is usual or normal, as of the gastric juice. Cf. hyperacidity.
- hy-po-blast (hī'pō-blast), n. [See hypo- and -blast.] In embryol., the endoderm.—hy-po-blas'tic (-blas'tik), a.
- hyp-o-caust (hip'ō-kāst or hī'pō-), n. [L. hypocaustum, < Gr. ὑποκαυστον, < ὑποκαίειν, heat from below, < ὑπό, under, + καίειν, burn.] In anc. arch., a chamber for the reception or distribution of heat; a hollow space or flue in the floor or wall of a building, which received and distributed the heat from a furnace.
- hy-po-chlo-rite (hī'pō-klō'rit), n. [See hypo-.] In chem., a salt of hypochlorous acid.—hy-po-chlo'rous, a. In chem., noting or pertaining to an acid, HClO, whose solutions have marked bleaching properties.
- hy-po-chon-dri-a (hī'pō-kon'dri-ā or hip'ō-), n. [LL. hypochondria, pl., < Gr. ὑποχόνδρια, a. neut. pl. of ὑποχόνδριος, under the cartilage (of the breast-bone), < ὑπό, under, + χόνδρος, cartilage.] Orig., as pl., the parts of the body under the cartilage of the breast-bone and above the navel (see hypochondrium); hence, as sing., a morbid condition, formerly supposed to have its seat in those parts, characterized by depressed spirits, fancies of ill health, etc.—hy-po-chon'dri-ac (-ak). [Gr. ὑποχονδριακός.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the hypochondria (as, the hypochondriac regions); also, pertaining to or suffering from hypochondria or morbid depression. II. n. A person suffering from or subject to hypochondria.—hy-po-chon-dri'a-cal (-dri'ā-kal), a. Hypochondriac.—hy-po-chon-dri'a-cal-ly, adv.—hy-po-chon-dri'a-sis (-dri'ā-sis), n. [NL.] Hypochondria as a pathological condition.—hy-po-chon'dri-um (-dri-um), n.; pl. -dria (-dri-ā). [NL.] Either of two regions of the human abdomen, situated on opposite sides (left and right) of the epigastrium, above the lumbar regions; also, a corresponding region in lower animals.
- hy-po-co-ris-tic (hī'pō-kō-ris'tik or hip'ō-), a. [Gr. ὑπο- fat, fāte, fār, fāl, āsk, fāre; net, mē, hēr; pin, pīne; not, nōte, möve, nōr; up, lūte, pūll; oi, oil; ou, out; (lightened) aviāry, ēlect, agōny, intō, unite; (obscured) errānt, operā, ardent, actōr, natūre; ch, chip; g, go; th, thin; τη, then; y, you;

κοριστικός, < ὑποκορίζεσθαι, use endearing or fair terms, < ὑπό, under, + κόρος, boy, κόρη, girl.] Endearing, as a pet name; diminutive; euphemistic. — hy-po-co-ris'ti-cal-ly, adv.

hy-po-cot-yl (hī-pō-kot'il), n. [From hypo- + cotyl (edon).] In bot., in the embryo of a plant, that part of the stem below the cotyledons. — hy-po-cot-y-le'don-a-ry (-i-lē'don-ā-ri), a. In bot., below the cotyledons.

hy-po-cra-ter-i-form (hī'pō-kra-ter'i-fōrm), a. [Gr. ὑποκρατήριον, the stand of a crater or bowl (< ὑπό, under, + κρατήρ, E. crater): see -form.] In bot., salver-shaped: applied to a corolla consisting of a straight tube surmounted by a flat and spreading border. Also hy-po-cra-ter-i-mor'phous (-mōr'fus).

hy-poc-ri-sy (hi-pok'ri-si), n.; pl. -sies (-siz). [OF. ypocrisie (F. hypocrisie), < LL. hypocrisis, < Gr. ὑπόκρισις, < ὑποκρίνεσθαι, reply, play a part, feign, < ὑπό, under, + κρίνειν, decide.] The feigning of a character or of beliefs, principles, etc., that one does not possess; esp., false assumption of virtue or piety; sanctimonious pretense.

hyp-o-crite (hip'ō-krit), n. [OF. ypocrîte (F. hypocrîte), < LL. hypocrita, < Gr. ὑποκριτής, actor, pretender, hypocrite, < ὑποκρίνεσθαι: see hypocrisy.] One given to hypocrisy; one who feigns virtue or piety; a pretender. — hyp-o-crit'i-cal, a. [Gr. ὑποκριτικός.] Of, like, or befitting a hypocrite; marked by hypocrisy. — hyp-o-crit'i-cal-ly, adv.

hy-po-cy-cloid (hī-pō-sī'kloid), n. [From hypo- + cycloid as in epicycloid.] In geom., a curve generated by the motion of a point on the circumference of a circle which rolls upon the concave side of another circle.

hy-po-der-ma (hī-pō-dēr'mā), n. [NL., < Gr. ὑπό, under, + δέρμα, skin.] In bot., a tissue or layer of cells beneath the epidermis; in zool., the hypodermis. — hy-po-der'mal, a. Of or pertaining to the hypodermis; also, hypodermic. — hy-po-der-mat'ic (-mat'ik), a. and n. Same as hypodermic. — hy-po-der'mic. [Gr. ὑπό + δέρμα.] I. a. Pertaining to parts under the skin; characterized by the introduction of medical remedies under the skin (as, hypodermic injection); introduced under the skin (as, a hypodermic remedy; a hypodermic syringe); also, lying under the skin, as tissue; of the nature of or pertaining to the hypodermis; also, burrowing or living under the skin, as certain parasites. II. n. A hypodermic remedy; a hypodermic injection; also, a hypodermic syringe. — hy-po-der'mi-cal-ly, adv. — hy-po-der'mis, n. [NL.] In zool., a layer of tissue lying under the outer integument of certain invertebrates, as the reticulated tissue lying beneath the cuticle of earthworms.

hy-po-eu-tec-tic (hī'pō-ū-tek'tik), a. [See hypo- and eutectic.] Noting or pertaining to steel whose combined carbon content is under 4.3%, which is the amount contained in the eutectic alloy of carbon and iron.

hy-po-gæ'al, etc. See hypogæal, etc.

hy-po-gas-tri-um (hī-pō-gas'tri-um), n. [NL., < Gr. ὑπογάστριον, prop. neut. of ὑπογάστρος, abdominal, < ὑπό, under, + γαστήρ, belly, stomach.] In human anat., the lower part of the abdomen, esp. the region between the right and left iliac regions. — hy-po-gas'tric, a.

hy-po-ge-al, hy-po-ge-an (hī-pō-jē'al, -an), a. [See hypogeous.] Underground; subterranean; in bot., hypogeous.

hy-po-gene (hī'pō-jēn), a. [Gr. ὑπό, under, + -γενής, produced.] In geol., formed beneath the earth's surface, as granite: opposed to epigene.

hy-pog-e-nous (hī-pō-jē-nus), a. [See hypogene.] In bot., growing beneath, or on the under surface, as fungi on leaves. Cf. epigenous.

hy-po-ge-ous (hī-pō-jē'us), a. [L. hypogeus, < Gr. ὑπόγειος, ὑπόγειος, < ὑπό, under, + γῆ, earth.] Underground; subterranean; in bot., growing or remaining underground.

hy-po-ge-um, hy-po-gæ-um (hī-pō-jē'um), n.; pl. -gea, -gæa (-jē'ā). [L., < Gr. ὑπόγειον, ὑπόγειον, neut. of ὑπόγειος, ὑπόγειος, underground: see hypogeous.] In anc.

arch., the underground part of a building; an underground structure or chamber.

hy-po-glos-sal (hī-pō-glos'al), [Gr. ὑπό, under, + γλῶσσα, tongue.] In anat. and zool.: I. a. Situated under the tongue, wholly or in part: as, a hypoglossal nerve (either of the pair of cranial nerves which give rise to the movements of the tongue). II. n. A hypoglossal nerve.

To devise something new, as by thought or ingenuity; originate or create something by exercise of an inventive faculty: as, "Young men are fitter to invent than judge" (Bacon's "Essays," Of Youth and Age); "They hunt old trails," said Cyril, "very well; But when did woman ever yet invent?" (Tennyson's "Princess," ii. 369).—in-vent'i-ble, a. Capable of being invented.

in-ven-tion (in-ven'shən), n. [L. inventio(n-), < invenire: see invent.] The act of finding (obs. or archaic: cf. Invention of the Cross, below); also, the act of inventing or devising by thought or ingenuity (as, the invention of labor-saving processes or machinery; the invention of gunpowder); original contrivance, as of something new; something invented or devised, or a product of inventive ingenuity (as, to patent an invention; this plan was his invention); also, the act of producing or creating by exercise of the imagination; mental fabrication, or something fabricated, as a made-up story or a false statement; specif., the exercise of imaginative or creative power in literature or art; also, the power or faculty of inventing, devising, or originating; the creative faculty.—Invention of the Cross, a church festival, observed on May 3, in commemoration of the reputed finding of the cross of Christ by St. Helena, mother of Constantine the Great, at Jerusalem, A.D. 326.

in-ven-tive (in-ven'tiv), a. Apt at inventing, devising, or contriving, as a person, the mind, etc.; having the function of inventing (as, the inventive faculty); also, pertaining to, involving, or showing invention (as, inventive skill; inventive drawing).—in-ven'tive-ly, adv.—in-ven'tive-ness, n.

in-ven-tor (in-ven'tər), n. [L.] One who invents; esp., one who devises some new process, appliance, machine, or article; one who makes inventions.

in-ven-to-ry (in-ven-tō-ri), n.; pl. -ries (-riz). [ML. inventorium, for LL. inventarium, < L. invenire: see invent.] A detailed list of articles, such as the items of property of an estate or the wares of a merchant, sometimes with a record of their nature or value; hence, a collection of articles which are or may be so listed.—in-ven-to-ri-al (-tō-ri-al), a.—in-ven-to-ri-al-ly, adv.—in-ven-to-ry, v. t.; -ried, -rying. To make an inventory of; enter in an inventory.

in-ven-tress (in-ven'tres), n. A female inventor.

in-ve-ra-cious (in-vē-rā'shūs), a. [See in-2.] Not veracious; untruthful.—in-ve-ra-ci-ty (-ras'i-ti), n.; pl. -ties (-tiz). Lack of veracity; untruthfulness; also, an untruth.

In-ver-ness (in-vēr-nes') coat. [From Inverness, in Scotland.] An overcoat with a long, removable cape (Inverness cape).

in-verse (in-vērs'), v. t.; -versed, -versing. [L. inversus, pp. of invertere: see invert.] To invert; reverse. [Now rare.]—in-verse (in-vērs' or in-vērs'). I. a. Inverted, or turned upside down (as, "I saw a tower buildied on a lake, Mock'd by its inverse shadow": Hood's "Two Swans," II); hence, in general, reversed in position, direction, or tendency (as, verify the addition by adding in inverse order); opposite in nature or effect, as a mathematical relation or operation (as, "The reigning taste was so bad, that the success of a writer was in inverse proportion to his labour, and to his desire of excellence": Macaulay's "Essays," John Dryden). II. n. That which is inverse; the direct opposite.—in-verse-ly, adv. In an inverse manner or order; in inverse proportion (as when one thing is greater in proportion as another is less, or less in proportion as the other is greater).

in-ver-sion (in-vēr'shən), n. [L. inversio(n-), < invertere: see invert.] The act of inverting, or an inverted state; reversal of position, direction, order, or relation; also, something inverted; in rhet., reversal of the usual or natural order of words; anastrophe; in chem., a hydrolysis of certain carbohydrates, as cane-sugar, which results in a reversal of direction of the rotatory power of the carbohydrate solution.—in-ver-sive (-siv), a. Characterized by inversion.

in-vert (in-vērt'), v. t. [L. invertere (pp. inversus), < in, in, on, + vertere, turn.] To turn upside down (as, to invert a tumbler or bowl); hence, in general, to reverse in position, direction, or order (as, to invert the letters of a name or the parts of a sentence); turn or change to the opposite or contrary, as in nature, bearing, or effect; in chem., to subject to inversion, as sugar.

in-vert-ase (in-vēr'tās), n. [From invert + -ase.] In chem., an enzyme which causes the inversion of cane-sugar, thus changing it into invert-sugar: found in plants and in the digestive juices of animals.

in-ver-te-brate (in-vēr'tē-brāt). [NL. invertebratus.] I. a. Not vertebrate; without a backbone; of or pertaining to the Invertebrata, an obsolete zoölogical division (sometimes still used for convenience) including all the animals without a vertebral column; fig., without backbone, or strength of character. II. n. An invertebrate animal; fig., a person lacking strength of character.—in-ver'te-bra-cy (-brā-si), in-ver'te-brate-ness, n.

in-vert-ed (in-vēr'ted), p. a. Turned upside down; reversed in position, direction, or order; turned or changed to the opposite.—inverted arch, in arch., an arch set upside down, that is, with its intrados below the axis or springing-line: used in foundation construction, etc.—in-vert'ed-ly, adv.

in-ver-er (in-vēr'tər), n.

One who or that which inverts.

in-vert-i-ble (in-vēr'ti-bl), a. That may be inverted.

in-ver-tor (in-vēr'tər), n. An inverter; in elect., a commutator.

in-vert-sug-ar (in'vērt-shùg'ār), n. A mixture of dextroglucose and levulose formed naturally in fruits and produced artificially by the inversion of cane-sugar.

in-vest (in-vest'), v. [L. investire (pp. investitus), < in, in, + vestire, clothe, E. vest, v.] I. tr. To clothe in or with a garment or article of attire (as, "Invest me in my motley": Shakspeare's "As You Like It," ii. 7. 58); cover or adorn as an article of attire does (as, a turban, or a diadem, invested his head); sometimes, to put on (a garment, etc.: obs. or rare); also, fig., to cover or surround as if with a garment, or like a garment (as, spring invests the trees with leaves; thick foliage invested the trees; darkness invested the earth); indue or endow (whether actually or by ascription) with a quality, attribute, or character (as, to invest a narrative with the charm of romance; to invest a friend with every virtue); belong to, as a quality or character does (as, the charm of romance invested the subject); also, to clothe in or with the insignia of office (as, "That, in the official marks invested, you Anon do meet the senate": Shakspeare's "Coriolanus," ii. 3. 148); hence, to install in an office or position; furnish with power, authority, rank, a right, etc. (as, "He had twice been invested with the consular dignity": Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," xii.); sometimes, to settle or vest (a power, right, etc.), as in a person; also, to surround (a place) with military forces or works so as to prevent approach or escape; hem in, as in besieging; also, to put (money) to use, by purchase or expenditure, in something offering profitable returns, esp. interest or income (as, to invest one's capital in stocks, real estate, or goods for trade); loosely, to lay out or spend (as, to invest large sums in books; to invest a dollar in having one's fortune told).

II. intr. To invest money; make an investment.

is-chi-um (is'ki-um), n.; pl. ischia (-ā). [NL., < Gr. ἰσχίον, hip-joint, haunch, ischium.] In anat., the lowermost of the three parts composing either innominate bone; either of the bones on which the body rests when sitting.

-ise. See -ize.

-ish¹. [AS. -isc: cf. -esque.] A suffix used to form adjectives (a) from nouns, with the sense of 'belonging to' (a people, country, etc.), as in British, Danish, English, Spanish, or 'after the manner of,' 'having characteristics of,' 'like,' as in babyish, girlish, mulish, wolfish, womanish (such words being now often depreciatory), or 'addicted to,' 'inclined or tending to,' as in bookish, freakish, qualmish, or (b) from other adjectives, with the sense of 'somewhat,' 'rather,' as in baddish, latish, oldish, reddish, sweetish.

-ish². [OF. F. -iss, in some parts of verbs with infinitive in -ir.] A termination (without assignable force) of many verbs from the French, as in accomplish, blandish, cherish, embellish, finish, flourish, polish.

Ish-ma-el (ish'mā-el), n. The son of Abraham and Hagar (see Gen. xvi. 11, 12), whose hand was to be "against every man, and every man's hand against him"; hence, one at war with society; an outcast.—Ish'ma-el-ite (-it'), n. A descendant of Ishmael (from whom the Arabs claim descent); hence, a wanderer; an outcast.—Ish'ma-el-it'ish (-it'ish), a.
Ish-tar (ish'tār), n. [= Astarte.] The chief goddess of the Babylonians and Assyrians. Cf. Astarte.

I-si-ac (i'si-ak), a. [L. Isiacus, < Gr. Ἰσιάκος.] Of or pertaining to the Egyptian goddess Isis.

i-sin-glass (i'zing-glās), n. [Appar. a corruption (simulating glass) of MD. huyzenblas = G. hausenblase, isinglass, lit. 'sturgeon-bladder': cf. hausen.] A pure, transparent or translucent form of gelatin, esp. that derived from the air-bladders of certain fishes; also, mica.

I-sis (i'sis), n. [L., < Gr. Ἰσις; from Egypt.] An Egyptian goddess, sister and wife of Osiris, usually distinguished by the solar disk and cow's horns on her head.

Is-lam (is'lām, iz'lām, or is-lām'), n. [Ar. islām, submission (to the will of God).] The religious system of Mohammed; Mohammedanism; also, the body of Mohammedans; the Mohammedan world.—Is-lam'ic (-lām'ik), a.

—Is'lam-ism, n. Mohammedanism.

—Is'lam-ite (-it), n. A Mohammedan.—Is-lam-it'ic (-it'ik), a.—Is'lam-ize (-īz), v. t.; -ized, -izing. To Mohammedanize.

is-land (i'land), n. [AS. īland, īgland, < īg, īeg, island, + land, land. The spelling island is due to association with isle (L. insula).] A tract of land completely surrounded by water; hence, something suggestive of this, in being detached or isolated; an isolated hill; a clump of woodland in a prairie; a platform in the middle of a street, at a crossing, for the safety of pedestrians; specif., in anat., an isolated portion of tissue or aggregation of cells (as, the island of Reil, a central cluster of convolutions of each cerebral hemisphere; the islands of Langerhans, certain collections of cells in the interstitial tissue of the pancreas, thought to be independent ductless glands furnishing an internal secretion).

—Islands of the Blessed, in class. myth., certain islands in the remote western part of the ocean, where favored mortals, rescued by the gods from death, were supposed to live in everlasting joy.—is'land, v. t. To make into or as into an island (as, "A thousand streamlets . . . With labyrinthine channels islanding A thousand rocks": Southey's "Thalaba," vi. 10); place on or as on an island; also, to dot with or as with islands (as, "The waveless plain of Lombardy . . . Islanded by cities fair": Shelley's "Euganean Hills," 93).—is'land-er, n. A native or inhabitant of an island: as, "some surly islander, of manners rude" (Pope's tr. Homer's "Odyssey," xxiv.).

isle (il), n. [OF. isle, île (F. île), < L. insula, island.] An island; now, usually, a small island (except in certain established names, as 'the British Isles').—Isles of the Blessed. Same as Islands of the Blessed, under island.—isle, v.; isled, isling. I. tr. To make into or as into an isle; place on or as on an isle. II. intr. To dwell or remain on an isle: "Lion and stoat have isled together, knave, In time of flood" (Tennyson's "Gareth and Lynette," 871).—isles-man (ilz'mān), n.; pl. -men. An islander: as, "The Isles-men carried at their backs The ancient Danish Battle-axe" (Scott's "Marmion," v. 5).

is-let (i'let), n. [F. islette (now îlette).] A small island; hence, a small isolated tract or area, as of color; in anat., an island, as of the pancreas.

ism (izm), n. [Noun use of -ism.] A distinctive doctrine, theory, system, or practice: as, "This is Abbot Samson's Catholicism of the Twelfth Century:—something like the Ism of all true men in all true centuries" (Carlyle's "Past and Present," ii. 15); a man interested in all the isms of the day. [Often in disparagement.]

-ism. [= F. -isme, < L. -ismus, -isma, < Gr. -ισμός, -ισμα, forming nouns from verbs with infinitive in -ίζειν, E. -ize.] A suffix of nouns denoting action or practice, state or condition, principles, doctrines, a usage or characteristic, etc., as in baptism, barbarism, criticism, Darwinism, Latinism, plagiarism, realism, socialism, vandalism, westernism. Cf. -ist and -ize.

iso-, is-. Forms of Gr. ἴσος, equal, used in combination: in chem., sometimes prefixed to the name of one compound to denote another isomeric with it.

i-so-ab-nor-mal (i'sō-ab-nôr'māl), a. and n. Same as isabnormal.

i-so-bar (i'sō-bār), n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, + βάρος, weight.] In meteor., etc., a line on a weather-map, etc., connecting fat, fâte, fâr, fáll, ásk, fáre; net, mē, hēr; pin, pine; not, nōte, möve, nōr; up, lūte, pūll; oi, oil; ou, out; (lightened) aviáry, élect, agōny, intō, ūnite; (obscured) errānt, operā, ardent, actōr, natūre; ch, chip; g, go; th, thin; ͡th, then; y, you;

places at which the barometric pressure (reduced to sea-level) is the same.—i-so-bar'ic (-bar'ik), a. Having or showing equal barometric pressure; of or pertaining to isobars.

i-so-bath (i'sō-bath),

n. [Gr. isos, equal, + βάθος, depth.] In phys. geog., a line connecting points that have the same depth below sea-level.—i-so-bath'ic, a.

i-so-bath-y-met-ric (i'sō-bath-i-met'rik), a. [Gr. isos, equal, + βάθος, deep, + μέτρον, measure.] Having the same depth below sea-level.

i-so-bath-y-therm (i-sō-bath'i-thērm), n. [Gr. isos, equal, + βάθος, deep, + θερμη, heat.] In phys. geog., a line connecting points of equal temperature in a vertical section of a part of the ocean.—i'so-bath-y-ther'mal, i'so-bath-y-ther'mic (-ther'mal, -mik), a.

i-so-ceph-a-ly (i-sō-sef'a-li), n. [Gr. isos, equal, + κεφαλή, head.] In art, a principle illustrated in ancient Greek friezes, etc., of representing the heads of the figures, whether seated or standing, at about the same level.—i'so-ce-phal'ic (-se-fal'ik), a.

i-so-chime, i-so-cheim (i'sō-kīm), n. [Gr. isos, equal, + χείμα, winter.] In phys. geog., a line on a map connecting places which have the same mean winter temperature.—i-so-chi'mal, i-so-chei'mal (-ki'mal), a. and n.

i-so-chro-mat-ic (i'sō-sō-krō-mat'ik), a. [See iso-.] In optics, having the same color or tint; in photog., orthochromatic.

i-soch-ro-nal, i-soch-ro-nous (i-sōk'rō-nal, -nus), a. [Gr. ισόχρονος, < isos, equal, + χρόνος, time.] Equal or uniform in time; performed in equal times; characterized by motions or vibrations of equal duration.—i-soch'ro-nism, n. Isochronous character or action.—i-soch'ro-nize, v. t.: -nized, -nizing. To make isochronous.

i-soch-ro-color (i-sōk'rō-us), a. [Gr. isos, equal, + χρόα, color.] Of the same color throughout.

i-so-cli-nal (i-sō-klī'nal), [Gr. isos, equal, + κλίνειν, incline.] I. a. Of or pertaining to equal inclination; inclining or dipping in the same direction; specif., noting or pertaining to a line on a map drawn through points at which the dip of the magnetic needle is the same; in geol., noting or pertaining to a fold of strata which is of the nature of an isocline. II. n. An isocline line.—i'so-cline (-klin), n. In geol., a fold of strata so tightly compressed that the parts on each side of the axis dip in the same direction.—i-so-clin'ic (-klin'ik), a. and n. Same as isocline.

i-so-cra-cy (i-sōk'ra-si), n. [Gr. ισοκρατία, < isos, equal, + κρατεῖν, rule.] Equality of rule or power; a government in which all possess equal political power.—i-so-crat (i'sō-krat), n. An advocate of isocracy.—i-so-crat'ic, a.

i-so-cryme (i'sō-krim), n. [Gr. isos, equal, + κρυμός, cold.] In phys. geog., a line on a map, etc., connecting points at which the temperature is the same during some specified coldest portion of the year.—i-so-cry'mal (-kri'mal), a. and n.

i-so-di-a-met-ric (i'sō-dī-a-met'rik), a. [See iso-.] Having equal diameters or axes; in bot., having the diameter similar throughout, as a cell. Also i'so-di-a-met'ri-cal.

i-so-di-mor-phism (i'sō-dī-mōr'fizm), n. [See iso-.] In crystal., isomorphism between the forms of two dimorphous substances.—i'so-di-mor'phous (-fus), a.

i-so-dy-nam-ic (i'sō-dī-nam'ik), a. [See iso-.] Pertaining to or characterized by equality of force, intensity, or the like; specif., noting or pertaining to an imaginary line on the earth's surface connecting points where the intensity of the magnetic force is the same. Also i'so-dy-nam'ic-al.

i-sog-a-mous (i-sog'a-mus), a. [Gr. isos, equal, + γάμος, marriage.] In biol., having two similar gametes in which no differentiation of sex can be distinguished, or reproducing by the union of such gametes: opposed to heterogamous.—i-sog'a-my, n.

i-sog-e-nous (i-soj'e-nus), a. [Gr. isos, equal, + γενν, bear, produce.] In biol., of the same or a similar origin, as parts derived from the same or corresponding tissues of the embryo.—i-sog'e-my, n.

i-so-ge-o-therm (i-sō-jē'ō-thērm), n. [Gr. isos, equal, + γη, earth, + θερμη, heat.] In phys. geog., an imaginary line or surface passing through points in the interior of the earth which have the same mean temperature.—i'so-ge-o-ther'mal, i'so-ge-o-ther'mic (-ther'mal, -mik), a.

i-sog-on (i'sō-gon), n. [Gr. isos, equal, + γωνία, angle.] In geom., a figure whose angles are equal.—i-sog-o-nal (i-sōg'ō-nal), a. Equiangular; isogonic.—i-so-gon'ic, a. Having or pertaining to equal angles; specif., noting or pertaining to an imaginary line on the earth's surface connecting points at which the deviation of the magnetic needle from the true north is the same.

i-so-hy-e-tal (i-sō-hī'e-tal), a. [Gr. isos, equal, + ὕετος, rain.] Pertaining to or marking equality of rainfall: as, an isohyetal line (a line on a map connecting places having the same amount of annual or of seasonal rainfall).

iso-la-ble (i'sō-lā-bl or i'sō-), a. Capable of being isolated.

iso-late (i'sō-lāt or i'sō-), v. t.: -lated, -lating. [First in isolated, p. a., < F. isolé, < It. isolato, pp. of isolare, isolate, < L. insula, island: cf. insulate.] To place or set apart; detach or separate so as to cause to be alone; cut off, as from contact, intercourse, or relations with others (as, "It became the maxim of Tory statesmen that England should . . . isolate herself from continental embarrassments": Lecky's "Hist. of Eng. in the 18th Century," i.); in elect., to insulate; in chem., to obtain (a substance) in an uncombined or pure state.—i-so-la'tion (-lā'shən), n. The act of isolating, or the state of being isolated (as, "the isolation of Crusoe, depicted by Defoe's genius": W. Churchill's "Coniston," ii. 19); specif., the complete separation from others of persons suffering from contagious or infectious disease; also, the separation of a nation from other nations by a policy of non-participation in international affairs.—i-so-la'tion-ist, n. One who advocates isolation; esp., one who favors a national policy of political isolation, or non-participation in international affairs.—i'so-la-tor, n.

i-sol-o-gous (i-sol'ō-gus), a. [Gr. isos, equal, + λόγος, relation.] In chem., having similar relations: applied esp. to a series of hydrocarbons each member of which has two hydrogen atoms less than the one above it.

i-so-mag-net-ic (i'sō-mag-net'ik). [See iso-.] I. a. Noting or pertaining to an imaginary line on the earth's surface, or a corresponding line on a map or the like, connecting places which have the same magnetic elements. II. n. An isomagnetic line.

i-so-mer (i'sō-mēr), n. [Gr. isos, equal, + μέρος, part.] In chem., a compound isomeric with one or more other compounds.—i'so-mere (-mēr), n. In zool., a homologous part or segment of a limb.—i-so-mer'ic (-mer'ik), a. In chem., of compounds, composed of the same elements in the same proportions by weight, and (in the usual, restricted sense of the term) having the same molecular weight, but differing in one or more properties.—i-som-er-ism (i-som'er-izm), n. The fact or condition of being isomeric.—i-som'er-ous, a. Having an equal number of parts, markings, etc.; in bot., of a flower, having the same number of members in each whorl.

i-so-met-ric (i-sō-met'rik), a. [Gr. ισόμετρος, < isos, equal, + μέτρον, measure.] Pertaining to or having equality of measure; in crystal., noting or pertaining to that system of crystallization which is characterized by three equal axes at right angles to one another.—isometric projection, the projection of an object upon a plane equally inclined to the object's three principal axes, so that dimensions parallel to these are represented in their true proportions. Also i-so-met'ri-cal.—i-so-met'ri-cal-ly, adv.

i-so-me-tro-pi-a (i'sō-me-trō'pī-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. ἴσος, equal, + μέτρον, measure, + ὤψ, eye.] A condition in which the refraction is the same in the two eyes.

i-so-morph (i'sō-mōrf), n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, + μορφή, form.] An isomorphous substance; also, an organism isomorphous with another or others.—i-so-mor'phic (-mōr'fik), a. Isomorphous; in biol., being of the same or of like form; different in ancestry, but alike in appearance.—i-so-mor'phism, n. The state or property of being isomorphous or isomorphous.—i-so-mor'phous, a. Crystallizing in the same or a related form: said esp. of substances of analogous chemical composition. Cf. homæomorphous.

i-son-o-my (i-son'ō-mī), n. [Gr. ἰσωνυμία, < ἴσος, equal, + νόμος, law.] Equality of political rights, as among citizens of a state.—i-so-nom-ic (i-sō-nom'ik), a.

i-so-pe-rim-e-ter (i'sō-pe-rim'e-tēr), n. [Gr. ἰσοπερίμετρος, of equal perimeter: see iso- and perimeter.] In geom., a figure equal in perimeter to another.—i-so-per-i-met'ri-cal (-per-i-met'ri-kal), a.

i-so-pi-es-tic (i'sō-pī-es'tik), [Gr. ἴσος, equal, + πίεζειν, press.] I. a. Pertaining to equal pressure: as, an isopiestic line (a curve showing the relation between volume and temperature in a body or system the pressure of which remains constant). II. n. An isopiestic line.

i-so-pod (i'sō-pod), n. [NL. Isopoda, pl., < Gr. ἴσος, equal, + πούς (ποδ-), foot.] Any of the Isopoda, an order or suborder of crustaceans (fresh-water, marine, and terrestrial) with seven pairs of legs, which are usually similar.—i-sop-o-dous (i-sop'ō-dus), a.

Blind Isopod (Caecidotea stygia), Mammoth Cave, Kentucky.

i-so-pol-i-ty (i-sō-pol'i-tī), n. [Gr. ἰσοπολιτεία, < ἰσopolίτης, one having equal civil rights, < ἴσος, equal, + πολίτης, citizen: see polity.] Equality of rights of citizenship between different communities or states; mutual political rights.—i'so-po-lit'i-cal (-pō-lit'i-kal), a.

i-so-prene (i'sō-prēn), n. [See iso- and cf. terpenene.] In chem., a colorless liquid hydrocarbon, C_8H_8 , of the terpene class, produced from caoutchouc or from oil of turpentine, and convertible into caoutchouc.

i-so-pyre (i'sō-pīr), n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, + πῦρ, fire.] An impure form of opal, sometimes used as a semiprecious stone.

i-sos-ce-les (i-sos'ē-lēz), a. [LL., < Gr. ἰσοσκελές, < ἴσος, equal, + σκέλος, leg.] Of a triangle, having two sides equal.

i-so-seis-mal (i-sō-sīs'mal or -sīz'mal), [Gr. ἴσος, equal, + σεισμός, earthquake: see seism.] I. a. Pertaining to equal intensity of earthquake-shock; specif., noting or pertaining to an imaginary line on the earth's surface connecting points characterized by such intensity. II. n. An isoseismal line.—i-so-seis'mic, a. Isoseismal.

Isosceles Triangle.

i-sos-ta-sy (i-sos'tā-sī), n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, + στάσις, a standing: see stasis.] Equilibrium when there is pressure from all sides; hydrostatic equilibrium; specif., the equilibrium of the earth's crust, a condition in which the forces tending to elevate balance those tending to depress.—i-so-stat-ic (i-sō-stat'ik), a. Pertaining to or characterized by isotasy.

i-so-ste-mo-nous (i-sō-stē'mō-nus or -stem'ō-nus), a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, + στήμων, warp, thread.] In bot., having the stamens equal in number to the sepals or petals.

i-so-there (i'sō-thēr), n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, + θέρος, summer.] In phys. geog., an imaginary line connecting places on the earth's surface which have the same mean summer temperature.—i-so-ther-al (i-sō-thēr'al or i-soth'ē-ral), a. and n.

i-so-therm (i'sō-thērm), n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, + θέρμη, heat.] In phys. geog., an imaginary line connecting points on the earth's surface having the same (mean) temperature.

—i-so-ther'mal (-thēr'mal), I. a. Pertaining to or indicating equality of temperature; pertaining to isotherms.

II. n. An isotherm.—i-so-ther'mal-ly, adv.—i-so-ther'mic, a. Isothermal.

i-so-ton-ic (i-sō-ton'ik), a. [Gr. ἰσότονος, < ἴσος, equal, + τόνος, E. tone.] In music, pertaining to or characterized by equal tones; in physiol., noting or pertaining to a contraction of a muscle when under a constant tension; in physiol. chem., characterized by equal osmotic pressure; noting or pertaining to a solution containing just enough salt to prevent the destruction of the red blood-corpuscles when added to the blood.

i-so-tope (i'sō-tōp), n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, + τόπος, place.] In chem., any of two or more chemical elements occupying the same place in the periodic table and apparently identical in properties, but differing slightly in atomic weight: as, certain of the common chemical elements are thought to be mixtures of isotopes.—i-so-top'ic (-top'ik), a. Pertaining to an isotope or isotopes; of the nature of an isotope.—i-sot-o-py (i-sot'ō-pī), n. Isotopic character.

i-so-trop-ic (i-sō-trop'ik), a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, + τρόπος, turn, way.] In physics, having the same properties (as elasticity or conduction) in all directions. Also i-sot-ro-pous (i-sot'rō-pus).—i-sot'ro-py, n.

Is-ra-el (iz'rā-el), n. [Heb. Yisrā'el, (appar.) 'he who striveth with God.'] A name given to Jacob after he had wrestled with the angel (see Gen. xxii. 28); also, the people descended from Israel or Jacob; the Hebrew or Jewish people or nation; fig., God's chosen people; the elect; the Christian church.—Is'ra-el-ite' (-it'). I. n. A descendant of Israel or Jacob; a Hebrew; a Jew; fig., one of God's chosen people.

II. a. Pertaining to Israel; Jewish.—Is'ra-el-it'ish (-it'ish), Is'ra-el-it'ic (-it'ik), a.

is-su-a-ble (ish'ō-ā-bl), a. That may be issued or may issue; in law, that admits of issue being taken.—is'su-a-bly, adv.

is-su-ance (ish'ō-āns), n. The act of issuing; issue.

is-su-ant (ish'ō-ānt), a. Issuing; emerging: in her., said of a beast of which only the upper half is seen.

is-sue (ish'ō), n. [OF. issue, eissue (F. issue), < issir, eissir, < L. exire, go out, come forth, issue, < ex, out of, + ire, go.] A going, coming, passing, or flowing out; egress; outflow; hence, a place or means of egress; an outlet or vent; also, that which comes out, as an outflowing stream; also, offspring or progeny (now chiefly in legal use as, to die without issue); a child or children; a descendant or descendants; also, the yield or profit from land or other property (now legal: as, the issues, rents, and profits of an estate); something proceeding from any source, as a product, effect, result, or consequence (as, "Many receipts he gave me; chiefly one . . . the dearest issue of his practice": Shakspeare's "All's Well," ii. 1. 109); the ultimate result, event, or outcome of a proceeding, affair, etc. (as, to await the issue of a contest; the policy was vindicated in the issue); rarely, a proceeding† or action† (see Shakspeare's "Julius Caesar," iii. 1. 294); also, a point in question or dispute, as between contending parties in an action at law or in any controversy (as, to raise an issue; to try or decide an issue); a point the decision of which determines a matter; a point at which a matter is ready for decision (as, to bring or put a case to an issue); a point or matter the decision of which is of special or public importance (as, "Some awful moment to which Heaven has joined Great issues, good or bad for human kind," Wordsworth's "Character of the Happy Warrior," 50; to seek issues for a political campaign); also, the act of issuing, sending, or putting forth, or that which is issued; a quantity issued at one time (as, an issue of stamps, coins, or bonds; the daily issues of a newspaper); in med., a discharge of blood, pus, or the like; also, an incision, ulcer, or the like emitting such a discharge, esp. one produced or maintained artificially to relieve morbid conditions in some other part.—at issue, in controversy; in question.—to join issue, to submit an issue jointly for legal decision; hence, to join in controversy; take issue.—to take issue, to join in controversy; take a contrary view; disagree, as with a speaker, statement, or conclusion.

Lion Issuant.

fat, fāte, fār, fāl, āsk, fāre; net, mē, hēr; pin, pīne; not, nōte, mōve, nōr; up, lūte, pūll; oi, oil; ou, out; (lightened) aviāry, ēlect, agōny, intō, ūnite; (obscured) errant, operā, ardent, actōr, natūre; ch, chip; g, go; th, thin; ʔh, then; y, you;

—is'sue, v.; —sued, —suing. I. intr. To go, pass, or flow out; come forth; emerge; also, to proceed as offspring, or be born or descended (now chiefly legal); also, to come as a yield or profit, as from land (chiefly legal); come or proceed from any source; arise as a result or consequence; result, as from something; have the result or outcome as specified; result or end (in); also, to be sent or put forth authoritatively or publicly, as a writ, money, etc.; be published, as a book.

II. tr. To send out, discharge, or emit (as, to issue water, smoke, or heat); esp., to put forth authoritatively, formally, or publicly (as, to issue an edict or a warrant; to issue invitations; to issue bonds); put into public circulation (as, to issue stamps or money); publish (a book, periodical, etc.); also, to give birth to, or bear. —is'sue-less, a. Without issue; childless; without result. —is'sue-pea, n. In med., a pea or similar round body inserted in an issue or artificial ulcer in order to maintain the discharge of pus. —is'su-er, n.

—ist.
